Nothing of the Indian Empire.

CALAIS, Me., Sunday, Oct. 10—Evening.

The line east of this place is not in working order this evening, so that it is impossible to obtain any communication with Halifax, at which port the steamship Indian Empire is now fully due, with Galway dates of the 26th ult.

The Drift of Quarantine Affairs.

CONTRACTS FOR NEW BUILDINGS TO BE AWARDED TO-DAY—THE ARK PROJECT, THE STATE OFFICERS AND THE QUARANTINE COMMISSIONERS—HOW THE VESSELS CAN BE REMOVED—WILL COMMODORE VANDERBILT MEDIATE?

To-day the Committee of Construction, on behalf of the Commissioners of Emigration, will award to contractors the building of offices, residences for the officers of Quarantine, residences for the Health officer and bargemen, barge-house, &c. The hospitals, which have been under contract five or six days past, are going up rapidly, and will be completed by the 1st of November, or thereabout. If the number of patients in the hospitals increase for the next few weeks as they have for the past half-a-dozen days, the comfortable and permanent brick hospitals will be very grateful and serviceable to the sick. In connection with the new hospitals which are being erected, a new feature of arrangement has been adopted. Attached to each hospital, but separated from the main building, there is an L arranged for sleeping apartments for the nurses. This feature is commended for the reason that it saves the nurses the necessity of sleeping in the same ward where the patient is. The slight attack of cold weather admonishes the Health authorities of the port and the Commissioners of Emigration that no delay is admissible in their duty of providing for the sick at Quarantine. Since the visit of the State officers to the Lower Bay, when the floating hospital project was virtually thrown overboard, there has been no hesitation with the Commissioners of Emigration respecting the propriety of pushing ahead permanent and commodious structures at Quarantine, to take the place of the hospitals and other buildings demolished by the mob. It is now currently rumored at Staten Island that the Governor, from his own observation on his last visit to the Lower Bay, was perfectly satisfied, and so expressed himself, that the floating-hospital project of the Quarantine Commissioners would not answer the purpose; and that he would not consent to the expenditure of a penny of the State's money towards the construction of the floating arks. The State officers associated with the Quarantine Commissioners agreed to have the plans of the latter, in respect to the arks and a crescent basin, examined by engineers to be appointed by themselves, (the State officers.) This restriction upon what have always been considered the prerogatives of the Commissioners, is not at all relished, and it is rumored that the Commissioners threaten to resign. To soften the indignity, it was stated that the law required the appointment of engineers by the State officers, but this apology would not go down. The statute does not require any such thing. On the other hand, it is claimed that the law contemplated the appointment of Commissioners of sufficient intelligence and integrity to make a judicious selection of engineers. Under the circumstances the Commissioners are not blamed for feeling the shaft aimed at them.

The common sentiment of the Island, since the visit of the State officers, is that nothing need be expected as to the removal of Quarantine, except what is being done, until after action is taken by the State Legislature. The concurrence of Commodore VANDERBILT with Mayor TIEMANN's views has had its effect, and is felt from one end of the Island to the other. The opinion is prevalent that if the Commodore should interest himself with the authorities of the port, and with the leading men of the Island, the Governor would be induced very soon to call off the troops. The islanders are growing anxious over the whole subject, and not the least of their anxiety arises about the preliminary movements in the selection of a member of Assembly. They are making an effort to get a man who will be strong and yet discreet, as their interests must be vitally affected in many ways by the proceedings of the next Legislature.

On the 8th instant all the vessels in the lower bay from infected ports were allowed to proceed to the Upper Quarantine. The United States steam-frigate Susquehanna alone remains. On and after Nov. 1, vessels from domestic ports will not be required to stop at Quarantine, unless such port should be infected at the time of sailing, such as New-Orleans, Charleston, Savannah, &c.

QUARANTINE CHARGES—ANOTHER LETTER TO MAYOR TIEMANN.

The Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, to whom was referred the subject of alleged extortionate charges at Quarantine for lighterage, stevedores' and coopers' work, have addressed a lengthy letter to Mayor TIEMANN in reply to his communication and accompanying affidavits of the 18th ult., which was made in answer to a call of the merchants for information on that subject. This rejoinder of the Committee goes very fully into the whole subject, and is intended to show that the parties having charge of the lightering business have been obliged to employ outsiders to do such portion of the work as they were unable to perform, granting them permits, for which a large per centage is retained. They state that heretofore the business has been done by any one who chose to engage in it and give the necessary bonds for the observance of Quarantine regulations; that under the present system many of these lightermen come to the City and lodge within its limits. They desire to see the whole business thrown open to competition, allowing any responsible stevedore to enter the field who will give bonds for the due observance of Quarantine regulations. Instances of onerous charges are cited for towing vessels from the Lower Bay by the Cinderella, one of various heavy charges for freight, passengers and provisions. The Committee express the opinion that unless immediate steps are taken to remedy the evil complained of, no cotton will be sent here next year from Southern ports, and but very little sugar from the West Indies. Among those who complain loudest of the detention of their vessels at Quarantine, and of the charges for lighterage, cooperage, &c., are Messrs. R. L. & A. STEWART, who are large importers of sugars from Cuba, (where yellow fever has prevailed severely during the Summer, rendering great precautions necessary by the Board of Health at our Quarantine.) Some of their vessels have been sent to Bristol, R. I., where they have been discharged, the sugars being reshipped to this City at a great saving in expense. SPOFFORD, TILESTON & Co. make similar statements respecting cargoes of cotton and rice from Charleston and Savannah.

The answer of the Board of Health to all these complaints will probably be forthcoming in due time. So far they have shown no disposition to connive at unreasonable charges, or other unnecessary restrictions upon commerce, but being charged with the protection of the health and lives of the City during a season when more yellow fever has been imported from abroad than for many years past, and when almost every vessel from Cuban ports and from New-Orleans bound to New-York, have lost more or less of their crews by disease, a great responsibility rests upon them, the conflict between the ship-owners and the health and business interests of the City placing them constantly between two fires. They are that should yellow fever, in an epidemic form, break out in our midst, the loss to the business of the City in every department would be immense. Against this and the fears of the people, they are not disposed to which is necessary inconvenience to the shipping two or three months of the year. Happily, on the 8th of October most of these restrictions upon vessels from the South were removed, and the main cause of complaints must therefore cease.

Naval Intelligence.

The U. S. steamer Harriet Lane left her anchorage at Quarantine on Saturday morning at 9 o'clock A. M., and proceeded to sea. She touches at St. Thomas for supplies on her way to Paraguay.

OUR SQUADRON IN THE EAST INDIES.—The Secretary of the Navy has received dispatches to the 5th of July from Commodore TATTNALL, in command of the squadron in the East Indies and Chinese seas. The commodore states his intention of impressing the Japanese with a proper idea of our power by making a full display of the squadron. The squadron would return to the coast of China about the last of October.

STATE POLITICS.

DELIVERED AT UTICA, OCT. 8.

From Our Own Reporter.

UTICA, N. Y., Saturday, Oct. 9, 1858.

The Hon AMASA J. PARKER, Democratic candidate for Governor, addressed a large meeting at Mechanics' Hall, in this city, last evening. In the course of his speech, Judge PARKER denied that he had voted against the right of petition in Congress.

On his introduction to the audience, the Judge was received with rounds of applause, and proceeded to speak as follows:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I come before you, to-night, in compliance with your call, not for the purpose of speaking at all of the candidates that are before the people for different offices, but to speak briefly of some of the great questions of National and of State interest, in which all of us, as citizens of this State and Nation, are most deeply concerned. I speak not of men, but of principles. Men are nothing, principles everything. In sustaining this Government of ours. I come before you at a time of great public interest—at the conclusion of a great struggle that has lasted for several years in this country, and which was, in fact, terminated, so far as the principle involved was concerned, in the election of Mr. BUCHANAN, and may now be regarded, I trust, as settled for all time to come. I speak of the question which, two years ago, so deeply agitated this community—the question whether Congress should exercise jurisdiction over the Territories, or the people themselves—a question between Congressional and Popular Sovereignty.

You cannot forget the excitement that prevailed, two years ago, in this whole community, and you know that at that time there was a black cloud of fanaticism hanging over all these Northern States, threatening to produce the most disastrous consequences. You cannot forget that struggle; you never will forget it. It was a marked period in our history. It was a struggle, on the part of the Constitution and the Union, for life and existence, and that great struggle has terminated most happily. You must recollect—none who are candid, and truthful, and fair, will deny—that in that great struggle the Democratic Party placed itself manfully between the fanaticism of the North and the Constitution, and rallied upon that Constitution, ready to risk their lives, everything, to save their country from the danger that threatened it. [Applause.] It was indeed a fearful and a doubtful struggle. This fanaticism surged up at the North by operating improperly upon the minds of the people, upon a question with which we had nothing to do—stirring up Northern feeling against our brethren at the South—forgetting, for the time, that we were brethren, or descendants, from a common ancestry—stirring up prejudices against the South, carrying on a war against them, and that for the sole purpose of obtaining power, and of securing the control, and thereby the patronage, of the General Government—perilling the perpetuity of the country for the paltry purpose of temporary power. I say it was a fearful and a doubtful struggle, and in that struggle the Democracy stood up, fighting bravely and manfully. And it was a glorious result when it terminated in the election of JAMES BUCHANAN, [applause,] placing him in the Presidential Chair, at the head of these States, to rebuke, at any time necessary, the fanaticism of the North or South, to stand by the flag of his country—which was a glorious result; and it settled the great question between Congressional sovereignty and the sovereignty of the people. This question, gentlemen, between the governing power at Washington and that of the people to judge and act in regard to those matters for themselves, is but a continuation of the same class of questions that have always existed between the Democracy and their opponents. It is a question between power and popular rights. It is the same question that agitated the country at the time of securing independence. It is the question that has constantly existed, at different periods of our history, between power and popular right. And I am happy to say that the Democracy has always been found upon the side of popular right. [Cheers.] They stand by the rights of the people. They hold that the people are capable of self-government, no matter whether they live in a Territory or in a State. North or South, that they are capable of governing themselves. That it is the man that is capable of governing himself. That it does not rest upon the man's possessing property—not upon the question of his living west of the Mississippi—and is just as competent in Kansas as a few months before in Massachusetts, and emigrating a few months previous to the West. That this depends on no accident that concerns the man, but it is the right of the man himself—the Heaven-bestowed birthright of self-government. That Democracy recognizes, wherever that man may be, or however situated. [Applause.] Gentlemen, we are all proud of this leading principle in the Democratic creed. We are proud of the Democratic Party. It is a party that has existed from the organization of this Government, and has always been found on the side of the people in giving them their rights. It has by this party been always contended that this right belonged to man, no matter where he may have been born or what his creed. [Cheers.] It is this Democratic Party, unchanged in name and character—always the same—standing upon the rock of the Constitution—it is that that we speak of, and it is that of which we are proud. It is that same Democratic party that meets the emigrant upon the shore, and takes him by the hand, and welcomes him as a brother, and gladly receives him here into this great Democracy. [Applause.] The Democracy meets and welcomes him, no matter where he may have been born, whether on that green-girt isle, or in Germany, or sunny France—no matter from whence he comes, here we receive him at once when, on passing the short term of probation prescribed by law, making himself familiar with our Constitution and country's institutions, he becomes a citizen. And I trust he will always have the right to come here and help sustain this Government that was planted by our fathers—ready always to defend it when invaded by whatever foes. [Cheers.] Such, gentlemen, is Democracy; such it has always been; such, I trust, it will be for all time to come. I have said that it never changes its name. It neither changes its name nor its principles. Its name is the same it has held since the Government was organized. But what can you say of its opponents? You find them under all sorts of flags, defending all sorts of schemes of government;—agreed in only one thing, they are always found against popular rights. They are not ready to stand by the Constitution, but are ready to take advantage of all sorts of excitements—whether Anti-Masonry or Anti-Slavery or any thing else—so that they may bring a temporary party into power. I speak of this in contrast to the Democracy, which changes no name, which never finds it necessary by having spoiled one name to take another. [Applause.] Our principles are the same now as in the time of JEFFERSON, who stood for the rights of man against the alien and sedition laws. I tell you there are thousands and millions on the other side of the Atlantic who watch its results with great interest. Their governmental organs sympathized with Mr. FILLMORE, and expressed their wishes for his success. But the people—the masses—who sympathized with our Government here, who would gladly have become a part of the Government—they sympathized with us in that great movement. And we should do injustice to them if we did not suppose that thousands and perhaps millions of hearts there were gladdened by the result that secured the stability of the Union. The reason those papers assigned for their wishing the success of Mr. FILLMORE was, that it would put an end to this Republic—a Government that they feared, because the power of this Government is to be feared now by every other nation on the earth. [Cheers.] There can be no doubt that these questions will recur from time to time. And can there be any doubt what is the duty of any good citizen in regard to them? The struggle to which I referred is passed by. Thousands and tens of thousands who have been misled by it, now that they have had time for reflection, I have no doubt, see their error. It is well that that excitement has passed by, and left the country whole and united, and I trust to remain so for a long time to come. It gives the people a breathing spell from the times of excitement. And people when they see how this country is flourishing under its Government now in power at Washington—how it has upheld honor on sea and on land and commanded respect—those who reflect will, I think, see their error, and I trust will go with us hereafter. Questions of this kind always must arise in this country, when our opponents are struggling for power, and our party struggling to prevent this fanaticism at the North from being carried so far as to drive out our brethren at the South. It is an appropriate time now to review these questions. I wish every citizen of the State would do so fairly and candidly. And if, after a fair examination, he did not find he was wrong, then I greatly mistake the results that have occurred. I have reason to suppose that the thousands who were led off by this question of Kansas, Kansas, and acted with the Republican Party two years ago—I have reason to suppose they see their error, and are ready to return. They at least see that that question is terminated. One prominent Republican, who was one of the number who joined them two years ago—a man of high integrity and ability—said "the bond that bound the radical Democracy to the Republican Party is broken—Kansas is free." And then he went on to speak as no man would speak who meant to support the Republican candidates at the coming election. He says Kansas is free; yes, she is free. How made free? Not by the act of Congress. Congress has not excluded Slavery from Kansas. But by the act of the people themselves. And they fairly have secured more than we claimed for them. And they have secured more to us and to me, no matter to what party he belongs, but rejoices that Kansas is to be a Free State. And she is also free, just as we want her to be, by an act of popular right, and not by an act of legislation enforced by Congress. Why, this very result in Kansas is worth all the arguments in the world—for it is a great practical argument—against Congressional sovereignty. It shows you that the people may be safely trusted to speak and act for themselves on the question of Slavery. The doctrine of non-intervention is the true doctrine. You have only to leave the people to act for themselves, uninfluenced by emissaries from the North or the South, and they will act aright. You could not draw from history a better illustration of the working of the doctrine we contended for at that time. We said, leave this matter to the people, carry out the doctrine of non-intervention, let the people of Kansas, when the time comes, speak for themselves. The Republicans said, you will make it a Slave State. Not so, we said. And she has made herself free by her own act, and not by the intervention of Congress. [Cheers.] Gentlemen, you may regard this great question of the right of a people of a Territory to speak for themselves as to their institutions as settled forever. It is true the leaders of the Republican Party hold on to the doctrine that Congress shall say there shall be no more Slave States. But they are leaders without an army. The people will not march up to that doctrine. And the doctrine of Popular Sovereignty is as well established as any heretofore established by the Democratic Party. It is indeed a glorious result. It settles a great question that never, I trust, will be agitated in time to come. So it has always been in the history of the country. What great question has ever been originated by our opponents? Not one. Has not every great measure come from, been proposed by, the Democratic Party, and been opposed by the other party, by whatever name they may have been called—been established, and finally established as the best thing that could be done? [In illustration, the speaker alluded to the Sub-Treasury, and the repeated struggles preceding its adoption, after its introduction to Congress by Mr. BUCHANAN—the cry all over the country, the speaker said, "Gold for the office-holders, rags for the people," creating a panic throughout all the Northern States.] The Democratic Party, gentlemen, never expects to thrive upon the alarms of prejudice. The Democratic Party never expects to take advantage of temporary or local excitements. It is found defending Democratic measures, pursuing the even tenor of its way against all those excitements and alarms upon which alone their opponents almost entirely subsist. The principles of the Opposition are as changing as their name. They were called Whigs a few years ago, Republicans two years since—what they will be called a year hence, certainly only a prophet can tell. I hope there are here young men about to cast their first vote. I hope they will remember that it is one of the most solemn and important events of their lives. Important that they should start right. I think that no young man who reads and reflects, who is acquainted with the Constitution and history of his country, can hesitate as to the position he should occupy in starting off in his political career. I think his duty will lead him to act with that Democratic Party which has always been found the defender of the Constitution and the protector of individual rights. [Applause.] If he joins that party, he will have no occasion to change either his name or political principles. [Applause.] He will feel in the patriotism that exists in his heart a self-satisfaction for every ballot he puts into the box, though he may, for the time being, be found in a minority; for he will know that this excitement will be temporary, that this alarm will soon subside, and he will stand forward as before, advocating the same principles and defending the same measures, and upholding the Union under all circumstances. Gentlemen, I do not come here to defend myself against any attacks that may be made. I am not put upon the defensive in any way. But I see a charge made by a newspaper to which, perhaps, I may be excused for referring—that twenty years ago I voted that certain abolition and incendiary resolutions should be laid on the table as soon as received. [Applause.] I did so vote. But I did not vote against the right of petition. I voted that they should be laid on the table after their reception. I plead no statute of limitation. But I could not help thinking how awkwardly they would be placed if they went back in the record twenty years. How many parties has my opponent belonged to since?—how many different names, and what their principles? But I do not complain that he goes twenty years back, for I stand now as then upon the Democratic platform [cheers] unchanged, and, I trust, unchangeable for all time to come. [Applause.] I thank them for calling my attention to the subject. I shall glory in the opportunity of discussing it in every part of the State, if such opportunity is presented. And I beg you will go back with me to that time, in 1838. At that time there was an excitement—for I told you they occurred periodically. The Abolitionists got up a systematic mode of petitioning Congress. They petitioned Congress not only to abolish Slavery in the District of Columbia, but in the States themselves. Nay, more, they petitioned openly for the dissolution of the Union. And yet, their petitions were printed, stereotyped, and sent in by the thousand. I have seen them piled up many feet high, waiting for disposal. They were insulting to everybody. You may judge the excitement such a course caused in the South. I doubt whether there has been a greater excitement in the history of our country. They constantly poured in petitions for everything they had no right to do—and, singly, one after another occupying the time of Congress with what Congress had no power over. It was seen that the intention was to stir up the slaves to murder their masters. And the South might well be alarmed to see these incendiary petitions pouring in in this way. The Southerners besought that they should not be presented. The North opposed this, and wished them printed. The Democrats resolved upon a middle course. While the Southern members said these petitions shall not be presented, the Democratic members said they shall be presented, but they shall be laid on the table and shall not be read publicly. They shall be received, and every member may go to the table and read them, but we will not be the means of circulating these incendiary publications over the country. We made a compromise. It was a compromise on this question of Slavery. Without a compromise we never could have had a Constitution. It was a compromise that agreed to receive these petitions and lay them on the table. Who will say this was wrong? Perhaps the Abolitionists. But they thought and think more of carrying out their ends than serving the Union. We acted with the Democracy of the whole Union; and among those of this State were SILAS WRIGHT, LOCOMB, WILLIAM TULLER, ISAAC PERRY. I could name you twenty of the Democracy of this State then voting as I did. And six years later this thing was found so satisfactory that it was embodied in the first rule of the House of Representatives. And FRANCIS KING himself gave just the same vote I did. He gave the vote six years later than I did. And when this attack is now made upon me, it is an attack upon the whole Democracy of the Union—every Democrat, in and out of Congress, at the North and at the South. And Republicans can be named, who acted as I did; who approved that vote. They made speeches approving it afterward. When you see this attack made upon me, it is an attack upon every Democrat who has joined the Republicans. They will find it a hard thing to discuss, for every Democrat who has joined the Republicans the last two years is on my side. But I am taking up more time than I intended in discussing national affairs. It is well that a time has come when something else can be thought of besides national affairs. It is well that a time should come when a little attention could be paid to the affairs of the State. You have heard nothing but Kansas, Kansas, Kansas. We have been trying to govern Kansas fifteen hundred miles off. It is time we paid some attention to the government of New-York. They say that Kansas is done. It has bled, and died, and done. I do not see but it has. They have done talking on that subject. I beg you to look a little at the State of New-York. Those who were Democrats originally, and who have been misled and drawn off to the Republicans, when you come to State questions, they agree with us. They want economy, and they have no reason for voting against us, but every reason for voting for us. And we have enough to do to look to our own affairs, when the excitement has ceased in regard to national questions. This State is abundantly oppressed with taxation, which calls for an economical administration of its affairs. And who does not feel an interest in the canals? They are the property of the State. It has been proposed in a high quarter to sell them. The Democracy proposes that the State shall retain them—not sell them to any speculator or corporation. Now every agent who is connected with the canals is responsible to the State, and if he does not do his duty, we can turn him out and put another in. But sell them to a great corporation, and you will establish a power that will govern your State—use it as an immense monopoly. We oppose the sale of the canals. Luckily the Constitution says the canals shall remain the property of the State forever. And I trust if another Constitution is made, it will retain that provision. [Cheers.] The Democratic Party is for completing the enlargement of all the canals. Give them, too, the benefit of steam, if it can be used to the greatest advantage. Use the best possible means for making them capable of the greatest possible public benefit. Securing the business to the canals will build up our great City of New-York—to become yet the greatest city of the world. Put your tolls so low as to defy competition—so low as to command not only the business of this State, but of all around us; and besides, in this way you also secure a large revenue from tolls, and thus these canals will be paid for by their own tolls, from their great business. There can be no doubt, it seems to me, as to the wisdom of this policy; certainly there can be none as to the position occupied by the Democratic Party. This is one of the questions of State policy deeply involved in this election. You that have watched the history of legislation since our opponents came into power, see reason enough for a change of government. Look over your statute books, with the Constitution before you, and see the violations of the Constitution constantly staring you in the face. There! were times, gentlemen, when such as he from your City stood up manfully and exercised the veto power to protect the Constitution—who stood up for the rights of the individual as well as of the Constitution. But since, New-York has been deprived of many Constitutional rights. A gross invasion of personal right, an evasion if not violation of the Constitution is exhibited in the police system of New-York—in subjecting them to an authority not created by their own will. You know very well, gentlemen, that the Democratic Party is, always has been, the defender of the Constitution. It has claimed a strict construction of the Constitution. It is one of its cardinal principles that Constitutions are to be construed strictly. The Democratic Party stands up for a strict construction of the rights secured by Constitutions, and defended by veto if in power at the time. Your rights, gentlemen, come from whatever quarter. [Cheers.] The act of voting on your part should be regarded as the most solemn act of your lives. The blessings you enjoy may not be transmitted to your posterity, they may be greatly lessened, and the time may come when this great Democracy, for such it is—may cease to exist, or it may become valueless, by the innovations made on it by other parties that spring up for the hour and wither away. The rests then with you, citizens of Oneida—your county distinguished for its agriculture, industry, everything that is creditable to the people—rests upon you more than if you enjoyed less of these blessings—whether this responsibility shall be faithfully borne by me rests with you and not with me. [Great cheering.]

Governor SEYMOUR followed with a few remarks, and the meeting, which was large and enthusiastic, closed.

Men and Ship News.

AN IMPORTANT ARRIVAL.—The steamer Charles West, from Buffalo, arrived on Saturday at her pier, No. 6 East River, after a very successful trip, the demonstration of the utility of steam in substitution for horse and mule power upon the Canal, and the propulsion upon the old lines of steam tow-boats on the river. This steamer brought 4,000 bushels of wheat, 124 tons freight, and towed the Wm. Crouter, which had 440 barrels of flour, 1,371 bushels of wheat, machinery and castings, making 143 tons, or 377 tons of freight to both boats. She left Buffalo on the morning of the 4th inst., and reached the Hudson at West Troy, 338 miles, on Monday evening, the 4th inst., making, after the deduction of detentions, about seven days running time, or an average of about two miles per hour. The C. W. was obliged to discharge freight at Albany and Sing Sing, the Crouter clustered with the barge-boats crafts around the tow-boat, as in old style, from Albany to New-York. The Charles West has a slightly-improved model, by easier bow-lines, and an easy stern, in the rise of which, upon either side, is a screw propeller of 3 feet diameter, each revolving underwise from the right and left banks. Her propellers are literally screws, having a continuous spiral of blade instead of the usual open-bladed propeller. She has a single vertical engine of 14-inch diameter and 14-inch stroke, situated over her driving crank shaft, which runs at right angles to her screw-shafts, and which interlock with bevel gears, multiplying the screw revolutions 3½ times. Her engine-room is forward of her stern cabin, and her machinery is compactly and conveniently arranged.

THE EXPLOSION ON BOARD THE HAMMONIA.—The following is the statement of the Captain of the Hammonia concerning the late disaster to his ship:

Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1858—Wind N. E., weather clear. At 5 o'clock A. M. we had taken all our cargo and all the passengers' baggage. At 8 o'clock A. M. we weighed anchor and steamed slowly down the river Elbe. Stopped off Glückstadt at 10 A. M. for the first-class passengers. They arrived by the steamer Schwalbe and were taken on board at 11 A. M. This done, we started again and passed Cuxhaven at 2 P. M. At 2 P. M. the pilot left us. At 2½ P. M. passed Pilot Galliott. We had just passed the latter place when a violent concussion caused the ship to shake; at the same moment we discovered the after part of the quarter deck, near the stern, shattered and burning. The pumps and hose were immediately put into requisition and the fire soon extinguished. The engine was meantime stopped, as the helm was rendered unmanageable by the fragments of wood scattered around. These were soon removed, the engine again set in motion, and we returned to Hamburg.

Our presumption is that the fire originated by the explosion of the powder magazine, which is situated abaft the quarter-deck. This magazine is always locked, and the key kept by the fourth officer. The powder is kept in a strong copper box, which has a hole of the size of a cartridge, and said hole is always guarded by a lock. The whole magazine is constructed according to the requirements of marine officers.

The last shot from the Hammonia was fired off Glückstadt at 11 o'clock A. M. The powder magazine was then shut up by the third officer, and the key delivered to the fourth officer, who had it in his possession at the time of the explosion.

Mr. MULLER, from Oldenburg, was severely injured; Madam ANDEE, Mr. BAERE and Miss BERRMANN slightly.

On the return of the Hammonia to Hamburg the following day a judicial investigation of the accident took place by the proper authorities, but the cause of the accident could not be discovered.

SIGNED—H. Schwensen, Commander; H. Taube, first officer; M. Seebach, second do.; G. D. Falck, third do.; N. C. Frauzen, fourth do.; O. T. Berg, Chief Engineer; Dr. R. Neander.

The wounded were left in Hamburg.

Mme. ANDEE, who was from Philadelphia, a second cabin passenger, and slightly wounded, together with Miss FANNY BERRMANN—also slightly wounded—returned to their hotel at Hamburg. Mr. BAERE, from Costa Rica, went to the house of his friends, and Mr. MULLER only was taken to the hospital.

The Hamburg papers, in publishing an account of the accident, speak highly of the presence of mind of Captain SCHWENSEN, who was unmoved amid the terror and consternation of the passengers; and also speak of the courage of the crew, who rushed immediately to the scene of the accident to render whatever aid they could, regardless of their own personal danger.

The passengers have published a card complimentary to the officers and crew of the Hammonia.

Captain SCHWENSEN knew nothing of the Austria's catastrophe till he was informed of it by the pilot on Tuesday morning. He is deeply grieved at the calamity. He speaks highly of Captain HEYDEMANN as a sailor and a gentleman, and only can credit the reports of his course in the fatal and trying moment to a sudden derangement of mind.

Among the passengers of the Hammonia, are three persons supposed to have been lost in the Austria. Mrs. SAGER, of Cincinnati, first cabin passenger in the Hammonia, was supposed to be in the second cabin of the Austria. J. and H. WELLMAN, of Cincinnati, supposed to be on the Austria, also came by the Hammonia.

How the Comet Appeared on Saturday Night.

DONATI's Comet, towards which all eyes have been directed for three weeks' early twilights, reached its maximum of brightness on Saturday evening. It was then distant from the noses of the free and enlightened population of this favored town only the trifling stretch of fifty-four millions of miles. Everybody turned out to have a look at the extra performance of the celestial visitor, conscious that such a sight might not happen again during the very limited lifetime that is allotted to this degenerate people. The nucleus was very brilliant, the tail prodigious. A star of the second magnitude might have rivaled the illumination of the comet, but nothing less was worthy to come into comparison therewith. The caudal extremity had a curve, a large curve, such a curve as a scimiter has; but its end was shadowy, faint, tremulous and uncertain. The distance that was interposed between the erratic phenomenon and that other point of light, Arcturus, was visibly increased, even since the previous night. The race between Arcturus and Comet on Wednesday night, was about even. It was a struggle to find which could reach the horizon earlier—for all the world like a "neck-and-neck" pull on the Fashion; but on Saturday, when the Comet was doing its utmost, the star was "distanced" essentially. The Comet had gone off at a tangent, in the space of time required for one terrestial revolution, and without previous notice, and the neighborly approach was already forgotten. The view from twilight until deep dark, was magnificent. The air, clear and cold, intensified the brilliancy of the celestial phenomena, and it was past 8 o'clock before the great throng of star-and-comet gazers in this region had an end put to their enjoyment of the spectacle. Now the Comet will grow fainter and recede, gradually, as it came; still visible, but diminishing in splendor. But it has been worth seeing.

The last "statement of an eye-witness," (from the careful watchers in the Harvard Observatory,) published in the Boston Advertiser of Saturday, imparts some interesting information:

"The curvature of the tail was noticed on the morning of the 6th of September. It is highly probable, from this observation, that the plane of curvature does not lie in the plane of the orbit, as has commonly been supposed; for, had this been the case, from the position of the earth at that date, being close to the line of nodes, the tail ought to have been seen straight.

On the 20th, the first of a series of extraordinary phenomena manifested itself in the region contiguous to the nucleus. A crescent-shaped outline, obscure and very narrow, was interspersed, like a screen, between the nucleus and the sun; within this, instead of a softly-blended nebulous light, indicative of an undisturbed condition of equilibrium, the fiery mass was in a state of apparent commotion, as though upheaved by the action of violent internal forces. On the 23d, two dark outlines were traced more than half way round the nucleus, and on the next evening still another. Each of these was evidently the outer boundary of a luminous envelope, the brightest being that nearest the nucleus.

On the 28th four envelopes were seen, and others have subsequently been formed, almost under the eye of the observer, their motion of projection from the nucleus being evident from night to night. The rapidity of their formation, and the enormous extent to which they are ultimately expanded, are phenomena extremely difficult to explain. The scene of chaotic confusion presented within the inmost envelope can only be accounted for as the result of sudden and violent disruptions from the central body, projecting immense volumes of its luminous substance towards the sun, which by some unknown law is in turn repelled by that body, and driven off to the distant regions of space, forming the vast train of light so characteristic of these mysterious bodies.

It is probable that the Comet has now passed its maximum of brightness, although the length of the tail may be on the increase for some days to come. Whether we are yet to witness the inverse operation of the reconstruction of the nucleus by the subsidence of the envelopes, and of the material of the tail, upon it, or whether it is incapable of restoration to its original condition, are interesting subjects of speculation; the latter, however, would seem to be the most likely of the two alternatives."

[illegible] without effect, and we have already [illegible] Assembly [illegible] Government have indeed the [illegible] against Peking, except by the [illegible] the recital of [illegible] the greatness of Lord [illegible] the remorse of the [illegible] Nations. The decree of toleration, however, transported into China our traditional prejudices of the Catholic religion, extending to the Christians in general. But if this first concession of [illegible] value it must be allowed, however, that the concession granted to us into the Chinese territory, limited to five ports, was an important concession. It is also to be observed that the [illegible] in favor of Chinese Christians by the [illegible] of Tien-Ksin did not bear the stamp of a [illegible] act, and emanating solely from the Imperial will, that not had not the force of a conventional engagement, and in no manner authorized the preaching of Christianity nor the admission of missionaries into the provinces of the Celestial Empire.

On the other hand, the Foreign Legations were only allowed to reside at Macao or Hong Kong, and never could treat except with the Viceroy of Canton; our diplomatic embassy was obliged, like the others, to fix its residence outside the Chinese territory, and always to stand. It is impossible to communicate directly with the Central Government. This state of things was a cause of serious inconvenience, placing foreign representatives in an inferior position, which completely tied their hands, and lowered them in the estimation of the Chinese.

The treatment and the advantages which the Government of the Emperor has thought it to exact are now granted to us formally, and without reserve.

All the important ports of the Chinese coast, as also the great internal highways of communication, are open to our navigation and our commerce. Frenchmen who, adhering to the terms of the Convention of 1844, were only admitted to five ports, may henceforth, provided with passports, traverse, unobstructed, every portion of China.

It is no longer in virtue of a spontaneous edict from the Sovereign that the Chinese Christians cease to be the victims of persecution, but in virtue of a formal stipulation which, rendering homage to the blessings of the Christian doctrine, abolish the laws which forbade it, and allow missionaries of the West to circulate freely in the interior of the empire, to propagate it among the Chinese.

The Viceroy of Canton ceases to be the necessary intermediary for our communications; the representative of France will treat directly with the Cabinet of Pekin, and with that view he will have a residence in that capital. The disadvantages of this concession, which was very revolting to Chinese pride, are manifest. It can no longer be feared that the dishonesty of certain interpreters may prevent the prompt and satisfactory solution of any differences which may arise. This direct communication with the Chinese Cabinet will tend to dispel more than one false notion, and to enlighten on many points a Government which has nearly everything to learn respecting the nations of the West.

Commerce will receive a new impulse in virtue of the right henceforth acquired to merchants to purchase directly, without an intermediary merchandise on the spot of production. A new revision of the tariff will bring the custom dues in harmony with the fluctuations of price. Merchandise will no longer be subject to the arbitrary taxation placed upon it by the provincial Mandarins while on its way; the Government will publish a uniform tax of transit. The tonnage dues will also be reduced.

For a long time the shipping trade has stood in need of protection against piracy in those seas, where it is exercised with impunity. Measures will be taken to put a stop to this disorder.

Finally, the Chinese Government is bound to pay to France the sum of 15,000,000f. on account of losses suffered by French merchants, and as a compensation for the expenses of the war. Thus the sincere wishes of all enlightened minds have been granted. China, snatched from its state of immobility and isolation, will undergo the happy influence of Christianity and civilization, and will at the same time assume in the commercial movement of the world the place assigned to it by its immense resources.

In conclusion, it may not be out of place to observe that if such great results have been obtained at the end of the world with such a small display of military force, it must be attributed to the good understanding happily maintained between the Governments of France and England, and to the valor of which the officers of both countries have just given additional proof."

The English Treaty with China.

From the London Times, Sept. 24.

The Treaty of Tientsin has now been nearly a week in England, and not even a précis of it has been made public. The Hon. Frederick Bruce arrived at the Foreign-Office on Saturday, and every one naturally concluded that the treaty would certainly appear in the Tuesday's Gazette. The Gazette comes out and makes no sign. Merchants and shipowners were naturally impatient and irate. To them an early knowledge of the stipulations that must hereafter govern their commercial transactions are not only of the highest possible interest, but of great pecuniary importance. It is not only curiosity, but cash, that is in question. No wonder people are uneasy when it is certain that there are several men now in England who thoroughly know all the details of that document. Undue priority in the race of commercial speculation may not be designed, and yet may occur. We have been able to give the heads of the first draught upon which the Treaty was framed, but we know nothing of the document which was ultimately signed; and it is only by a very careful perusal of the language of the instrument itself that we can arrive at any certain knowledge of the completeness or incompleteness of the advantages secured. If it had been a question of days, we might have been content to wait until our Ministerial Bloodhound had whispered his secret to the earth and the corn had grown ripe enough to fall it. But this is not the text of a complimentary message to an American President or a Jersey official; it goes to the very pith and marrow of our commercial interests. Yet we alone of all the powers belligerent in China are subjected by official insolence—insolence is not the word, for insolence is an unusual or unaccustomed act—but by official indifference to remain ignorant of the terms of the Treaty. Russia knew long ago what her Treaty is and what ours is. The absolute despot who rules those realms, and whom we sometimes fancy to be half a barbarian, is hardly off, even from his capital when the Treaty arrived; but even in the plenitude of his despotism he had felt the case to be one of such importance that he had left the proper powers, and the Russian Treaty was abstracted and published to the subjects immediately upon its arrival. So, also, the French are at ease with respect to the terms of their Treaty. The Emperor was far away from Paris when M. de Bellecour arrived; for aught we know, half the French Ministers might have been taking his ease in killing red-legged partridges, and the other half might have been in attendance upon the Court. Napoleon III. has no small idea of his own dignity and prerogatives, but no State nonsense, no Ministerial idleness, no sets of clerks dressed in a uniform of foolscap and red tape were allowed to interpose between the French people and their treaty. The Treaty came forth promptly. The French are told that their compensation is fixed at fifteen millions of francs, and all these parts of the treaty which are points of interest with Frenchmen are known. The North Star not exploded Dr. Bazaine, the amiable and estimable American Consul for Ningpo, who has made the American Treaty, is already half-way across the Atlantic, and it is by no means impossible that the terms of this treaty of Tien-tsin may be flashed about the continent of America before they are known at Lloyd's. Already it has been shown that the despots of Europe have exhibited a consideration for the anxious curiosity of their people and a respect for their good-will quite unknown in this constitutional country. It only remains that democratic America, with an extra 7,000 miles of distance, should obtain her information before us, and we shall stand alone in our ignorance—a signal instance of a patient people contemptuously snubbed by a tenth-rate mediocrity.

Is it ignorance, or idleness, or mere stupidity which produces these most vexatious occurrences? Is Lord Malmesbury utterly unaware that there are large interests involved in the treaty of Tien-tsin? Does he believe that a treaty of commerce is like an appeal at Quarter Sessions, a thing that can be entered and acquitted, and taken up and opened when it is quite convenient, in all merrie England, when everybody is at leisure? If may be that he is quite incapable of comprehending that any one can possibly take any interest in the matter. While the government is for the most part carried on by gentleman farmers, it is not safe to speculate that any one of them knows much of the exigencies of commerce, or would care to emancipate himself from the slow traditional routine of other days. It is difficult to conceive Lord Malmesbury, or Mr. Baring, or Mr. Newdegate risking his Monday's hunt to a telegraphic wire, otherwise there would be a chance of time to receive directions to open and copy the treaty while Mr. Bruce was yet in London, nearly a week ago. Since Mr. Bruce arrived at Portsmouth four days have elapsed, and still no copy of the treaty has been made public. "The English public have taken so little interest in the matter, they have had so little to do with the war, their stake in the East is of such interior account, their commerce is so small as compared with that of France and Russia, that it is not worth while for a man to lay down his pen and write telegraphic messages; if they are in a hurry let them collate the treaties already published by Russia and France. These give the important articles, and the subsidiary and inferiority clauses so far as they affect France. Surely the public cannot want to read that dry stuff about tariffs and transit dues." These are the sentiments that seem to prompt the actions of our self-satisfied Foreign Office officials. Yet, oh ye men of Manchester and of Liverpool, and of Leeds and of London, these are the men whom you were within a few months so anxious not to embarrass! You would not indulge an Irish or Scotch member your breath, or trouble an assistant-Secretary for your interests, lest you should be thought to be not that your loved leader, Earl of Derby's party, but because you may be thought to be insincerely or unsettled politics. This is the kind of contemptible return you get from the idle class whom you have made your rulers contemporaneously with the issue of the treaty made in their behalf with China.

The Alleged Flight of Usery.

From the London Times, Sept. 22.

The story which appeared in a leading New-York paper (the New-York Times) that the European creditors of Mexico are to send a man of war to secure repayment to be proved to have some foundation of its applicability. The report which appeared in a quarter possessing the most ample means of information, and which has been copied in America, whose word on such a matter will immediately be hailed as a mandate by all the other writers, who are ever ready to seek a pretext for shewing an evasion of debts. JAMES HEWITT & CO.

Waifs from the Deep.

From the Philadelphia Press.

On Monday the Norwegian bark Catarina arrived at Quebec with fifteen of the passengers and seven of the crew of the burned steamer Austria. These are additional to the sixty-seven already rescued, and make a total of eighty-nine. None of the missing Philadelphians are among these further arrivals. A young girl of 14 years old is among the rescued, and it was hoped that she might be one of the daughters of Mrs. Vezin, but the difference of age is against this conclusion.

A curious circumstance connected with the unhappy losses which all so greatly feel and deplore, is the "hoping against hope" which some of the surviving relatives entertain. The wife of Mr. Thompson Graham, of Baltimore, is now visiting her relatives in Philadelphia, and while they have no doubt of his loss, she alone has a deep conviction that he is not dead. Either he was not on board the Austria, (though he wrote to her that he had actually paid for his passage,) or, if he was, then he must have been among the few who were rescued. It may be within the knowledge of many of our readers that a clergyman of this city was among those who left for Europe on the ill-fated President, and was never again heard of.

His wife, who remained in Philadelphia, and was deeply attached to him, never did, because she never would, believe that he was lost to her. Eighteen years have passed away, and yet that trusting lady—we cannot speak of her as wife, and she repudiates the name of widow—continues to expect his return. Every day a cover is placed for him at the table, where still stands his accustomed chair. Every ring at the bell, we are informed, awakens the cherished conviction of her heart that the loved one will return.

We await further accounts of the loss of the Austria from the survivors whom the Maurice carried away to Fayal. But they can add little information to what we already possess—that great carelessness was the proximate cause of the catastrophe, and that the captain, officers, and crew, exhibited great alacrity in their endeavors to save—themselves.

Movement of French Trade.

A work is published every year in France, which, if its interest were measured by the importance of the subjects treated of, ought to be almost universally perused, for it holds up a faithful mirror of the aggregate of French commerce, both with foreign countries and the colonies. Unfortunately, it comes out in the form of a bulky quarto of 600 pages, with the somewhat uninviting title of Tableau Annuel du Commerce de la France, and is so bristling with figures as not to be likely to excite any great emotion in the mind of the general reader. Still, it is a most important production for manufacturers and merchants—who, by the way, do not consult it one half enough—and is sometimes of utility to journalists, as furnishing a mine of facts, from which they can draw with advantage valuable information for their readers. The Débats does so at present, and we give a few extracts from its article:

"The French international trade amounted for the year 1857 to 5,328,000,000 of francs (72,000,000 less than in 1856), or more than four times the ordinary budget of France. The imports were to the extent of 2,689,000,000, and the exports to that of 2,639,000,000. The traffic by sea amounted to 3,830,000,000, and by land to 1,498,000,000. The table of exchanges with each country separately gives the following results:

	1857.	1857.	Increase per cent.
England	262 mil.	574 mil.	273
Belgium	110	410	100
Switzerland	181	406	129
Sardinia	148	249	68
The Zollverein	130	422	225
Russia	122	127	4
Spain	120	307	156
Turkey	117	220	88
Two Sicilies	50	86	72
Holland	38	60	92
Hanse Towns	37	59	59
Norway, Sweden and Denmark	35	49	40
Tuscany	31	55	77
Austria	23	40	74
Roman States	8	15	88
Portugal	5	16	260
Greece	4	14	250
Total	1,541	3,520	128
United States	323	645	100
Brazil	47	134	185
Other States of America	126	309	200
Total	496	1,148	142
Asia	49	148	270
Africa	48	126	163
French Colonies { Algeria	72	134	70
French Colonies { Others	162	243	50
Total	2,346	5,328	128

The average increase of the commerce of France is, for the ten years between 1847 and 1857, in the proportion of 128 per cent. But the trade with some countries more particularly, as is seen by the above table, has assumed still greater extension, and the seven following are named in the order of relative increase: England, Asia, Portugal, Greece, the Zollverein, Brazil, Africa, Spain and Switzerland. The same work presents us likewise with a valuable comparison of the trade of the principal French ports:

	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
Havre	541	729	1,270
Marseilles	675	458	1,133
Boulogne	154	176	330
Bordeaux	126	156	282
Paris	4	273	277
Saint Louis	159	109	259
Jeumont	163	90	253
Lyons	—	154	154
Nantes	99	20	119
Dunkerque	80	37	117
Strasburg	43	51	94
Valenciennes	38	29	67
Rouen	41	28	69
Cette	34	37	61

This table brings strongly into relief the preponderance of our two principal commercial ports, Havre and Marseilles; the first, the key of the Transatlantic trade—the second, of the Mediterranean. We have already observed that our total traffic by sea amounted to 3,830 millions of francs, in making up which sum Havre and Marseilles count for 2,403 millions, or very nearly two-thirds of our entire foreign trade by sea. Somewhat to our surprise we find Boulogne (the principal port on the coast for the produce of French fisheries) entitled to rank as the third port on the incontestable authority of figures; Bordeaux, the great medium of intercourse with the American colonies, ranks only as the fourth. Waifs from the Deep.

On Monday the Norwegian bark Catarina arrived at Quebec with fifteen of the passengers and seven of the crew of the burned steamer Austria. These are additional to the sixty-seven already rescued, and make a total of eighty-nine. None of the missing Philadelphians are among these further arrivals. A young girl of 14 years old is among the rescued, and it was hoped that she might be one of the daughters of Mrs. Vezin, but the difference of age is against this conclusion.

A curious circumstance connected with the unhappy losses which all so greatly feel and deplore, is the "hoping against hope" which some of the surviving relatives entertain. The wife of Mr. Thompson Graham, of Baltimore, is now visiting her relatives in Philadelphia, and while they have no doubt of his loss, she alone has a deep conviction that he is not dead. Either he was not on board the Austria, (though he wrote to her that he had actually paid for his passage,) or, if he was, then he must have been among the few who were rescued. It may be within the knowledge of many of our readers that a clergyman of this city was among those who left for Europe on the ill-fated President, and was never again heard of.

His wife, who remained in Philadelphia, and was deeply attached to him, never did, because she never would believe that he was lost to her. Eighteen years have passed away, and yet that trusting lady—we cannot speak of her as wife, and she repudiates the name of widow—continues to expect his return. Every day a cover is placed for him at the table, where still stands his accustomed chair. Every ring at the bell, we are informed, awakens the cherished conviction of her heart that the loved one will return.

We await further accounts of the loss of the Austria from the survivors whom the Maurice carried away to Fayal. But they can add little information to what we already possess—that great carelessness was the proximate cause of the catastrophe, and that the captain, officers, and crew, exhibited great alacrity in their endeavors to save—themselves.

Movement of French Trade.

A work is published every year in France, which, if its interest were measured by the importance of the subjects treated of, ought to be almost universally perused, for it holds up a faithful mirror of the aggregate of French commerce, both with foreign countries and the colonies. Unfortunately, it comes out in the form of a bulky quarto of 600 pages, with the somewhat uninviting title of Tableau Annuel du Commerce de la France, and is so bristling with figures as not to be likely to excite any great emotion in the mind of the general reader. Still, it is a most important production for manufacturers and merchants—who, by the way, do not consult it one half enough—and is sometimes of utility to journalists, as furnishing a mine of facts, from which they can draw with advantage valuable information for their readers. The Débats does so at present, and we give a few extracts from its article:

"The French international trade amounted for the year 1857 to 5,328,000,000 of francs (72,000,000 less than in 1856), or more than four times the ordinary budget of France. The imports were to the extent of 2,689,000,000, and the exports to that of 2,639,000,000. The traffic by sea amounted to 3,830,000,000, and by land to 1,498,000,000. The table of exchanges with each country separately gives the following results:

	1847.	1857.	Increase per cent.
England	262 mil.	574 mil.	273
Belgium	110	410	100
Switzerland	181	406	129
Sardinia	148	249	68
The Zollverein	130	422	225
Russia	122	127	4
Spain	120	307	156
Turkey	117	220	88
Two Sicilies	50	86	72
Holland	38	60	92
Hanse Towns	37	59	59
Norway, Sweden and Denmark	35	49	40
Tuscany	31	55	77
Austria	23	40	74
Roman States	8	15	88
Portugal	5	16	260
Greece	4	14	250
Total	1,541	3,520	128
United States	323	645	100
Brazil	47	134	185
Other States of America	126	309	200
Total	496	1,148	142
Asia	49	148	270
Africa	48	126	163
French Colonies { Algeria	72	134	70
French Colonies { Others	162	243	50
Total	2,346	5,328	128

The average increase of the commerce of France is, for the ten years between 1847 and 1857, in the proportion of 128 per cent. But the trade with some countries more particularly, as is seen by the above table, has assumed still greater extension, and the seven following are named in the order of relative increase: England, Asia, Portugal, Greece, the Zollverein, Brazil, Africa, Spain and Switzerland. The same work presents us likewise with a valuable comparison of the trade of the principal French ports:

	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
Havre	541	729	1,270
Marseilles	675	458	1,133
Boulogne	154	176	330
Bordeaux	126	156	282
Saint Louis	159	109	259
Jeumont	163	90	253
Lyons	—	154	154
Nantes	99	20	119
Dunkerque	80	37	117
Strasburg	43	51	94
Valenciennes	38	29	67
Rouen	41	28	69

This table brings strongly into relief the preponderance of our two principal commercial ports, Havre and Marseilles; the first, the key of the Transatlantic trade—the second, of the Mediterranean. We have already observed that our total traffic by sea amounted to 3,830 millions of francs, in making up which sum Havre and Marseilles count for 2,403 millions, or very nearly two-thirds of our entire foreign trade by sea. Somewhat to our surprise we find Boulogne (the principal port on the coast for the produce of French fisheries) entitled to rank as the third port on the incontestable authority of figures; Bordeaux, the great medium of intercourse with the American colonies, ranks only as the fourth. THE DRESSMAKER'S GUIDE.
Every woman is a dressmaker, in mind, if not in practice. Fine engravings please the child of her own fancy, no matter who makes them. The "Dressmaker's Guide" is therefore a work of interest, and in its October and November numbers it warmly eulogizes the current mode of adorning with rich ribbon trimmings the low-necked and double-skirt morning and evening dresses, worn so much by the fair, as well as the magnificent velvet trimmings, used with the elegant cloaks and for dressing opera-cloaks and mantillas. It instructs the ladies, besides, where to obtain these indispensable embellishments of choice quality, and make extraordinary bargains; for be it known that Mr. H. LICHTENSTEIN, No. 337 Broadway, is closing out his enviable stock of millinery and dress-trimming goods, and presents the most tempting opportunity to all in want of silk velvets and other desirable materials for ladies' bonnets and hats, such as uncut velvet, royal velvet, gros d'Afrique, plain velvet, chenille velvet, &c., not to mention besides Ostrich feathers, French plumes, and ribbons for puffing, bows, trimmings, &c., of every elegant description.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The first Overland Mail from California arrived at St. Louis at 9 o'clock on Saturday night, having left San Francisco on the 16th of September. The news is, consequently, ten days later than was received by way of Panama. The trip occupied but a little over twenty-three days, and six passengers came through by the stages. A large number of prominent citizens of St. Louis assembled at the depot on the arrival of the mail, and Mr. Butterfield, the President of the Overland Mail Company, was greeted with a hearty welcome. A long procession accompanied the mails to the Post-Office. There is no news of special importance from California. The line of telegraph from Placerville to Salt Lake City had been commenced. From Fraser's River the accounts are not encouraging. High water still seriously interfered with mining operations. From Oregon, we hear that a skirmish had taken place between a force under Major Garnett and the Indians, in which Lieut. Allen and six others were killed. The Indians had attacked a party of miners on the Wenatsha River, and killed one of them. There was a painful rumor that a party under Gen. Palmer had been massacred near Okanagan, but it was probably unfounded.

The steamship Indian Empire, of the Galway line, from Galway on the 26th ult., is now fully due at Halifax, but the telegraph line east of Cape Ro, was not in working order last night, and consequently we have no means of knowing whether she has arrived or not. Her news is three days later than the Canada's, details of which we publish this morning.

The Hon. Amasa J. Parker addressed the Democracy of Utica on Friday evening. He took occasion, in the course of his speech, to deny that he had voted in Congress against the Right of Petition, claiming that he voted only to lay the Abolitionist petitions on the table after they had been received.

All the Judges of the Supreme Court have refused to grant a writ of error in the case of Isaac Hall, the Rockland murderer. A meeting to excite public sympathy in his behalf, held in this city last week, proved a failure. The execution will take place on the 23d inst.

Three men were lost by the explosion of the boiler of the Dubuque steamer Hercules on the St. Croix River, eighteen miles below Ogdensburg, Saturday morning. The Hercules was owned by A. Finnegan, C. W., and was nearly new.

A new line of steamers is to be established between this port and Havana, under the patronage of prominent men who are engaged in the Cuban trade. Capt. J. J. Waters, who is the projector of the enterprise, arrived in the Cahawba, with specifications for two ships, the stock for which has been taken by parties in Havana. Mora & Huvardo Brothers are to be the Agents in this City.

The prize money awarded to the officers and crew of the Niagara for the capture of the steamer Echo, is $7,600. The Echo has been condemned and is to be sold at auction.

Private advices from Savannah indicate that the yellow fever in that city assumes a more serious type than is admitted by the Press.

The exhibitors at the late Crystal Palace Fair held another meeting on Saturday, in furtherance of their plan of getting up a new Fair, independent of the American Institute, and of projecting an organization to take the place of that institution. Verbal reports were presented by Dr. Kane and Mr. Burns, members of the Standing Committee. A mass meeting of the exhibitors is called for this evening, at a place to be designated by the Committee. The meeting was very enthusiastic, and the new movement is claimed to receive the sympathies of a large majority of the exhibitors at the late Fair, but that sympathy would be more manifest if the exhibitors were to attend the meetings. There are said to have been nearly 4,000 exhibitors at the late Fair, and of them not more than seventy-five have attended any of the three meetings held by the projectors of the movement.

A gang of First Ward ruffians, between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday morning, went into the porter-house No. 5 Washington-street, kept by an old man named David Harrington. The blinds were up, and the wife of Mr. Harrington, his son, and two young men were in. The gang, although told that the house was closed for the night, burst open the door, and compelled Mr. Harrington to treat them to drinks twice around. Having partaken of the drinks, some of the gang held Mr. Harrington while others rifled his pockets, which being completed, they knocked the old gentleman down, and afterwards extended the same treatment to his son and the other young man in the place. Drawing knives and pistols they left, threatening further violence if either of the parties ventured to make any outcry. Young Harrington ventured, however, to call out "Police," for his boldness was fired at, the ball grazing him on the side of the head, and making a gash several inches long through the scalp. One of the gang, James Toomey, was arrested; the others escaped. The escaped parties are well known, and warrants have been issued for their arrest.

The Rev. John Pierpont, of Boston, delivered an address before the New-York Spiritual Association yesterday, at Dodworth's Rooms. He addressed the members of the Spiritualists and talked of "table-tipping," "table-rapping," and the other phenomena of the sect, with a zeal that evinced the sincerity of his conversion to that faith.

Donati's Comet reached its period of maximum brilliancy on Saturday evening, and approached to a distance of fifty-four millions of miles from the earth.

There were 430 deaths in the City during the past week, a decrease of 18 as compared with the mortality of the week previous, and 20 less than occurred during the corresponding period last year.

The General Markets, on Saturday, closed quite heavily for Cotton, Flour, Wheat, Corn, and Beef, prices of which tended strongly downward. Provisions were in demand at, however, drooping prices for Pork. Groceries were less active. Some branches of trade presented no very important alteration. The number of vessels of all sizes in port was 731.

The San Francisco Overland.—The Overland Mail Company has demonstrated the practicability and utility of its contract. We print in another column news which left San Francisco on September 16, reaching St. Louis on the 9th instant, thus effecting the transit in twenty-three days, rivalling the fastest time by the sea route. This is well. It deserves the cordial and eloquent compliment paid it in the telegram of the President. We have at last a channel of intercourse with our Pacific coast that defied to marine vacillation, or the intervention of a [illegible] war, wholly upon land, that land our own, and so remote from national trench, as to be beyond the risk of interruption in case of war. Of course with the extension of the telegraph from St. Louis westward, and from Placerville eastward, this time will be materially shortened; and that extension is now actively prosecuted from both sides. The Isthmus routes—whether by Panama, San Juan or Tehuantepec—will have to hurry up their steamboats, if they would not be regularly beaten by the mules of Mr. Butterfield.

American Commerce and the Stade Dues.

On the day on which the last mail was made up in London, there was delivered to members of the British Legislature the Blue Book of the Select Committee appointed by the House of Commons, in April last, to inquire into the origin of the claim of the Government of Hanover to levy the Stade Dues. It was a part of the duty of this Committee to consider in what degree they are detrimental to British commerce, and the effect of giving notice to terminate the treaty under which Great Britain has assented to the payment of the toll. The report of the Committee contains a recommendation that notice should be given to terminate the treaty of 1844, and the opinion that such course would be attended with little loss or inconvenience to British commerce. This is not, however, the opinion of all the witnesses, one of whom, Mr. Ward, British Consul at Leipzig, recommended their redemption, as in the case of the Sound Dues, as the only means of getting rid of an obstructive and vexatious impost. This witness expressed the opinion that all the parties who are interested in doing so ought to contribute according to their interest, and he had no doubt most of them would. The United States, he added, complained very much of the impost, and had threatened to take summary measures to get rid of it, but whether they could do so or not he could not, of course, say. If Americans did not pay, it would be a great disadvantage to others who did pay, as the former would get the carrying trade. But he thought that the United States would come into the arrangement, as they did into the Sound dues compensation. With regard to the effect of terminating the treaties under which any of the powers have concluded treaties with Hanover in reference to these dues, it appears from a very elaborate history of them, given to the Committee by Professor Wurm, a great authority in Germany upon all questions of commercial history and law, that the Government of Hanover has no legal claim to them, the grant of the Emperor Conrad II. to the Archbishop of Hamburg and Bremen, in 1038, only conferring a right to levy tolls in the market of Stade. This is also the opinion of Professor Zachariæ, who is a subject of Hanover. It was simply a market toll, which has been perverted into a river toll. The object appears to have been the rebuilding of the Cathedral of Bremen, which had been burned by the Normans; but the Archbishopric was secularized prior even to the Treaty of Westphalia, so that there was no pretext even of the dues being appropriated to any purpose analogous to the intention of the founder. But, as in the case of the Sound Dues, they have been recognized by treaty in modern times; and the Government of Hanover rests its claim to levy the toll upon a treaty with Denmark in 1717, and a further treaty with Sweden in 1719, by which whatever right these countries possessed was transferred to the Elector of Hanover.

Since 1844 the dues have been levied under treaties which Hanover concluded in that year with the chief maritime powers, including the United States. Professor Wurm says that the English treaty created profound surprise in Germany, owing to its impolicy, as it acknowledged the right of Hanover to levy the dues, and thereby cut off any prospective benefit which might accrue to British commerce from the determination of the treaty. The position of England on the treaty being terminated will, according to Professor Wurm, be that of the powers who have not entered into engagements with Hanover on the subject; that is, the old duties will have to be paid, because the claim of Hanover has been recognized by the existing treaty, which merely regulates the rates to be paid by British goods while the treaty is in force. But Mr. Hargreaves, Private Secretary to the British Consul at Hamburg, is of opinion that the Hanoverian Government can only fall back upon the convention entered into in 1844 with the States bordering on the Elbe, by which the Stade toll was for the first time acknowledged to be a river toll, Hanover having contended until then that it was a sea toll. The treaty with the United States, and also that with Great Britain, was concluded subsequently to this convention. It seems clear, however, whether Professor Wurm or Mr. Hargreaves be correct in the views taken by them respectively, that the duties payable after the termination of the treaty will be at least as high as those paid under its stipulations. It seems to have been a matter of doubt with the Committee, however, whether England had recognized the right of Hanover to levy the Stade dues prior to 1844, and to what extent she did so by the treaty then concluded. Mr. Henly, the Chairman, whose draft was mainly followed in preparing the report, seems to have been of opinion that the claim of Hanover has not been recognized by his Government; and this is the view taken of the matter by Mr. Hargreaves. The treaty of Vienna, to which England was a party, gave to the fluvial States of Germany certain powers of regulating river tolls; but for years after the conclusion of that treaty Hanover persisted in maintaining that the Stade toll was not a river toll, and therefore that it was subject to the provisions of the treaty of Vienna. At a subsequent period she admitted that it was a river toll, and it was in consequence of this admission that the Elbe-bordering States entered into the convention of Dresden in 1844. It seems undoubted that this admission brought that convention and its consequences under the treaty of Vienna; but Mr. Hargreaves is of opinion that this fact does not bind England to the consequences of the Dresden convention, because the declaration of the revenue States that the Stade toll is a river toll is not in compliance with the Vienna act. It will be, in this case, a matter of inference from national law whether the treaty of 1844, and the usage under it from that time to the present, constitute a recognition by England of the toll. Mr. Hargreaves considers that there is nothing in the treaty from which the acquiescence of England can be inferred.

It is fortunate that the American relation to the question is disembarrassed from these niceties of interpretation. Our Government may fall back upon the history of this traditionary imposition, resting its objections upon its merits, or rather demerits, free from the labored glosses of these German publicists. The toll is none the less vexatious because petty in amount; and then it is the relic of a vicious commercial system, which should be repressed whether it present itself on the Elbe or at Canton, at Maimore or in Japan. We suspect that Professor Wurm has gone a step too far in assuming the readiness of this Government to commute the payment. He forgets that the Stade dues lack even the miserable plausibilities to excuse them which pleaded for the Sound dues.

Admonition to Americans.

The Courier and Enquirer enjoys a serene conviction that the Republicans are fully able, alone and unaided, to carry the State in November; but it nevertheless feels a degree of commiseration for the misguided Americans who persist in remaining beyond the pale of grace until the hour of pardon is nearly past, and warns them that after the present canvass they "will forever be repudiated by every honest man in the Republican ranks." This menace will doubtless have its effect. But the Courier and Enquirer ignores a source of trouble nearer home. There is a class, neither small nor inactive, of Republicans who voted for Fremont, and who will doubtless support the Republican Presidential nominee in 1860, that are now engaged in efforts to defeat the Republican nominee for Governor. Most of these will vote for Burrows, some possibly for Parker, and they all desire, for certain reasons, which they freely proclaim, to beat the Republican State ticket. If the Courier and Enquirer will open its eyes it can see them, and unless it closes its ears it must hear them. They are not hid, nor difficult to find. In this City they are numerous; in other parts of the State not less so. Among them are politicians of influence and standing, some of whom were delegates in the late Syracuse Convention. We, by no means, wish to stay the Courier and Enquirer's flaming sword in its hot pursuit of Americans. They are unquestionably acting with a distinct design to overthrow the Republican Party now, and care very little if such overthrow should involve its defeat in 1860. But while these reckless opponents have the coöperation of thousands of Republicans, it is greatly to be feared they may treat the rebuke of that journal with irreverence and its threats with profane disregard.

The Evening Post of Saturday discusses at length, and from its own point of view, the question "Why the Opposition in New-York is not united?" Every answer but the true one, it says, has been given, and it proceeds to state the "real" reason for the failure as follows:

"The real and only reason was that there were people in one, and perhaps both conventions, who went there to nominate a President in 1860, rather than a Governor in 1858. The American Convention consisted of a class of politicians who had one or both of two leading purposes in view: the one, to prevent Senator Seward from having the support of the State of New-York in the next National Convention, by defeating his friends now; and the other, to so modify and shape the Republican platform upon the subject of Slavery as to meet the local exigencies of Carrarnan, and the other Anti-Lecompton Americans in political association with him. The Republican Convention consisted, in a large degree, of men who were chosen to prevent the effort which had been making all Summer by the Americans, assisted by certain influential Republican presses, to dilute New-York Republicanism, and of many besides, perhaps, who desired the success of the Republican ticket this Fall, among other reasons, for the benefit that might possibly accrue from it to Mr. Seward."

It is possible that the Americans may dispute the Post's ascription of motives, so far as they are concerned, but for its own party it has some right to speak, and if we do not misconstrue its meaning, it intends to say that a majority of the Republican delegates were chosen expressly to prevent any union with the Americans. Assuming the correctness of the Post's facts, there was great political error on both sides; for, as that journal goes on to show, the success of the Republican, or in case of union, the joint ticket this Fall would by no means make certain the nomination of Mr. Seward in 1860, while it was well worth while for that gentleman's friends to take the risks of union, rather than the hazard of losing the State. But we do not agree with the Post that the Americans were mainly influenced by fear of Mr. Seward as a Presidential candidate. Their ideas in regard to the probabilities for 1860 were too nearly like those of the Post itself to occasion them much alarm. It must be recollected that their Council, by a large majority, called their Nominating Convention at the same time and place named for holding the Republican Convention, and that the basis of union adopted by the two Conference Committees was readily agreed to by the Americans. The reason why it failed to receive similar sanction from the Republicans has, up to this time, been a disputed problem. But, if the Post is right in saying that a majority of the Republican delegates were selected expressly to prevent union, there need be no further debate on the question. There may possibly be reasons which justify the Republicans in assuming an unnecessary chance of defeat, and the Americans in incurring an absolute certainty of being beaten, but if such reasons exist, they are not visible to the naked eye.

Repudiation of the Scotch Water Pipes.—To make an unfortunate movement in politics is bad; but to retreat ungracefully is usually worse. Mr. Buchanan has committed the two errors in question. Some months ago the Administration, being charged by Congress with the construction of Water Works for the City of Washington, contracted with Mr. Lawrence Myers, of Philadelphia, to procure the necessary supply of iron pipes from Scotland. Now Pennsylvania has iron of her own, a possession upon which she prides herself not a little. The fact was supposed to be known to Mr. Buchanan, the more especially as he is himself a production of the Keystone State. But, if he knew, he failed to remember the capacity of his native Commonwealth to furnish iron pipes, and, as above stated, a contract was made to import them. As a matter of course, loud and angry complaints assailed the Executive ear. Pennsylvania was outraged. The President, with unfilial hand, had touched her most tender point. She bethought her of instances, both ancient and modern, in which the sin of ingratitude was conspicuous; such as the serpent which stung the friendly bosom, and the eagle slain by a feather from her own wing. But in her wrath she deemed the conduct of the President beyond all precedent and parallel. Mr. Buchanan was naturally uneasy. The Union essayed the task of soothing the malcontents, but with little success. An election was at hand, and no one could tell how large a stream of mischief might flow through those unlucky Scotch pipes.

But when the night is darkest, daylight is at hand. Providentially, a loophole was found, and the Democracy of Pennsylvania may breathe again. Mr. Lawrence Myers fell inadvertently into a technical breach of his contract. He failed to deliver the pipes on the specified day. On the 6th inst., five days before the election, the President proclaimed that the contract was repudiated. The Union exultingly announced the fact to the Democratic Party, with an air which plainly said, "all is right now in Pennsylvania!" Mr. Myers may say (but no one pays much heed to what a sharp dealing is contrary to the practice of the Government. But he should remember, for his consolation, that the fame of a State election is seldom supposed to hang upon a single contract. Yet there will be not a few disinterested people to whom the whole affair must appear undignified and unworthy.

Prospects of Fusion Among the Republicans and Americans.

Notwithstanding all the adverse measures of some of the extreme members of both the Republican and American parties, there is so strong a desire for fusion among the masses on both sides that it will be difficult to prevent a union in the City and County tickets. The desire for union is greatly strengthened by the dissensions among the Regulars and Tammany men, which render the chances of success on the part of the Opposition, if they can bring about a fusion, almost certain. It is understood that members of the Conference Committees representing both parties have been thoroughly canvassed, and the result indicates that the Sheriff's office, Governorship of the Almshouse, and the Coronership will be accepted by the Americans, while the Republicans may be well content with the positions of County Clerk, District Attorney, Judge of the Supreme Court, and the two Coroners. This arrangement is a fair one, both in its political and pecuniary aspects, the Sheriff's office being considered nearly equal in pay and patronage to the three other positions which are to be conceded in exchange for it. The issue as between the Democratic and the Fusion nominees for the Shrievalty will thus be brought forward in the very strongest light, and the struggle of the respective champions will have a permanent influence on future candidates.

The Albion—Advice and Information.—Our very excellent neighbor, the Albion, possesses a rare faculty of pointed and delicate sarcasm. Its blade is so keen, at once so trenchant and penetrating, and at the same time so judiciously lubricated, that the victim sinks under the stroke, as if it were a palatable narcotic. There is a serious responsibility resting upon those whom Heaven has thus gifted. Much wrong may they do. Grave truths sometimes shrink and wither in the breath of ridicule; sensitive natures are consumed by it. Could we venture to prescribe to those consummate geniuses, who are enabled so to master the grandest subjects with a sneer, we should recommend them to temper their assaults with a touch of mercy, adding thereto a grain of knowledge.

The latter commodity is especially indicated in the case of our neighbor. We did but follow out a line of remark suggested by the progress of Russian influence in Asia, when all the incurable prejudices of John Bull are called into action, and, not content with dogmatizing upon the argument, the Albion, with admirable audacity, further dogmatizes upon the facts. To a native of England it is certainly a case of strong provocation that we should accept as authority a French writer, and believe in a splendid future for Russia. We may remark, however, in mitigation, what will evidently be news to our neighbor, that the Revue des Deux Mondes is not the sole existing authority for the progress of Muscovite civilization on the Amoor River. It is a matter of genuine astonishment to us that a writer usually so well informed has not heard of the elaborate report of Mr. Collins, printed and generally circulated as a public document, and largely quoted by the Press. That he should have failed to have found ample warrant for our statements in every one of his European files, abounding as they do with information to the same effect, is also surprising. The columns of this paper, we submit diffidently, might have aided him. It was but the other day we came at the pains to present the readers of the Times with a translation of a letter from a Russian officer, written at the South of the Amoor, containing ample proof of all we have ventured to say. To these sources of information we beg to point the Albion. When they have been duly digested it may cease to regard the Times as enthusiastic, and admit that a conflict between the double and single-headed eagles of Europe and America is within the range of rational speculation. And as a general rule, it will be found better, whatever the topic, to be at the trouble of investigating its details, than to resort to the labor-saving expedient of indiscriminate ridicule—a weapon equally within the reach of wise men and blockheads, though usually employed by the latter.

London Times on American Credit.—If querulousness be a sign of second childhood, the London Times may be suspected of hastening decrepitude. It will be seen from an article which we reproduce elsewhere, from its city column, that it returns to the discussion of the views of this paper in regard to the acquisition of Mexico, and persists in deducing from them a disposition, should that event occur, to repudiate the Mexican debt to European bondholders. From this gratuitous inference, it is easy to proceed, as it does, to another, namely, that when occasion offers, we shall be quite as prompt to plead usury to the payment of our own bonds and obligations due abroad; and the moral of the reasoning is, of course, that it is high time there should be a limit put to American credit in the European markets.

The narrow premiss upon which all this expansive logic rests is the position of the New-York Times that the foreign creditors of Mexico had in the first instance been careful to indemnify themselves for the extraordinary risks they ran by exacting extraordinary premiums; that they had subsequently converted these risks into proximate certainties by obtaining a pledge of the customs revenues as security. With this guarantee, we ventured to say, they ought to rest until the opportunity for American intervention should mature; and that we could see nothing so desperate in their condition, whatever we might see in the condition of Mexico, to warrant unusual solicitude on our part. The whole of our namesake's case rests on this foundation. Not a word of repudiation; not a word denoting a wish to negative the assumption that has uniformly attended the American policy in regard to a protectorate, that the revenues, if they come into our hands, are to be burdened with all existing legal incumbrances. When the Cambridge carries was asked whether his ass was strong enough to draw an inference, "Anything in reason," was the answer. In that line our venerable cotemporary is equally notable.

It may be worth while to add, that it is grossly unfair to argue a willingness to plead the statute of usury, from an unwillingness to take from a third party a security exposed to that defence. We have just shown that in this Mexican question we have not even assumed the latter position. But if we had, it would indicate no lack of sound faith, no disposition to evade obligations assumed with full knowledge of their conditions, no lache propensity to rascality in financiering. In urging this [illegible] of [illegible] Mexico, we [illegible] American credulity into the seizure of Mexico, by frightening our moneyed classes into that measure. Such an attempt would be as little prosperous as the other.

An Organ Read Out of its Own Party.—The Democratic Party has but one professed daily organ in this City, and that one, we regret to see, has been read out of the party by bell, book and candle. The Administration organ in Washington performed this ungracious act on Friday last. It denounces its colaborer in this City: "Ignorant, narrow-minded, illiberal, and exacting, without intellect, honor, or public confidence, they assume to speak as if by authority, and to issue decrees precisely as if they possessed the power to enforce them."

Pennsylvania Election.—The annual State election in Pennsylvania occurs to-day. No Governor is chosen this year, the term of the present Executive expiring Jan. 1, 1861. The officers to be elected on a general ticket, are a Judge of the Supreme Court and a Canal Commissioner. Besides these officials, members of Congress, State Legislature and local officers are chosen.

Amusements.

The most decided and interesting feature of the present week is undoubtedly the Testimonial benefit to Mr. Maretzek, which takes place to-night—with a preliminary matinée, at 2 o'clock, just to whet the appetite. Mr. Maretzek and his company go south immediately, and for a brief time we shall be without opera—as far as Mr. Maretzek is concerned, for many months. These circumstances alone are interesting, and calculated to attract a full audience. But there is, we hope, a better and more genial feeling at work—a desire to pay a substantial compliment to a very deserving man. For many years Mr. Maretzek has stood well with the public. He has supplied the community with new singers and new operas. The great battles of the lyric drama have been fought under his banners; but, although the victor, he has seldom borne off the spoils. These things should be remembered on the occasion of a Testimonial benefit.

The plan of the testimonial is, first, a matinée, beginning at 2 o'clock, when the entire opera of "Linda di Chamounix" will be repeated. Between the first and second acts Miles. Gallieni and Fraenzi will dance the "Zingarella;" between the second and third acts Mlle. Lamoureux and M. Smith will dance a Bohemian polka. In the evening the opera of "Ernani" will be given for the first time this season; between the acts there will be dancing by the artists we have named, and singing by Mme. Gazzaniga, (Spanish ballads.) After the opera there will be a grand tragic pantomime scene, called "The Death of Ugolino," by Signor Rossani, Miles. Gallieni, Fraenzi and Lebrun. After that the Liberty Duet, from "Puritani," by Signor Gassier and Signor Cesare Nani, who makes his debut on this occasion. This is surely enough.

The season at Wallack's Theatre has opened prosperously, and the bill of last week is to be repeated during the present. A new comedy by Mr. Charles Dance is underlined on the bills, in which a number of new artists will make their first appearance. At Burton's Theatre the Lucy Escott Opera Troupe have met with a very moderate amount of success. This is attributable, in a large measure, to the fact that the artists were more or less indisposed during all the past week, and unable, in consequence, to render full justice to themselves. We have received no announcement for to-night, and presume, therefore, that the season is at an end. Mr. Burton commences an engagement in Boston to-night. At Niblo's Theatre Mr. Bouucicault's new melo-drama of "Fauvette" is of course the attraction. It is a skillfully constructed play, and excites the tender emotions of the audience in an eminent degree. The scenery is very fine, and the stage appointments all that can be desired. At Laura Keene's Theatre Sheridan's comedy of the "School for Scandal" will be played to-night, with a very excellent cast. Miss Keene announces a new three-act comedy by Tom Taylor, called "Our American Cousin," written, it is said, expressly for the lady's company, although we cannot see an advantage in that circumstance, inasmuch as Mr. Taylor has never seen the company. At the French Theatre (Metropolitan Hall) M. Sacc, the stage manager, takes his benefit to-morrow night, when an excellent programme is provided. The lease of this little establishment proposes to enlarge it by the addition of galleries and other contrivances for the accommodation of the good public.

At the Bowery Theatre, Mr. Boucicault's drama of the "Phantom" is announced for performance, together with "Rafael," and the "Privateer of '76." At the National Theatre Mr. J. W. Wallack, the eminent tragedian, commences a round of his most admired impersonations, assisted by the whole strength of Mr. Purdy's excellent company. At Barnum's, Tripson's mechanical theatre, and Dr. Valentine's humorous lectures are still the leading attractions. The Minstrel companies (Wood's and Campbell's) offer excellent programmes.

Religious.

Mr. Berry at the Prayer-Meeting in John-street Church.—On Saturday last a large prayer-meeting was held in the John-street Church, at which Mr. Berry, one of the passengers saved from the Austria, conducted the services and related his personal experiences whilst awaiting instant death at the time of the destruction of that ill-fated vessel. He and a friend of his who was on board, interchanged messages to be delivered to their respective relatives in case of either being saved, and then leaped into the water. His friend was lost, whilst he was obliged, because of the strain on his arms, to abandon the life-preserver with which he had provided himself on board, and sank twelve or twenty feet into the water. On rising to the surface, he saw the preserver some distance off, and swam towards it. Two stout men were endeavoring to reach it, but he reached it first and saved himself. He swam about for an hour or so, consoling himself with the thought that his Father's eye was on him, but at last felt so exhausted that he thought life was not worth such a struggle. He had nearly yielded to this when he saw the French bark in the distance, and an immediate reaction followed. His vigor returned, and he sustained himself for two hours and more until rescued by the boat. At this time, so serene was his mind and so confident his hope in the Saviour's love, that he was almost sorry that his life was prolonged, and he hoped that, at his dying hour, he would experience the same ecstasy he felt at the moment he believed himself about to be summoned before his Father in Heaven.

Sermons.—Sermons were delivered yesterday at the South Baptist Church, in West Twenty-fifth-street—that in the morning, by the Rev. Dr. Eaton, President of the Madison University, and that in the evening, by the Rev. Dr. T. F. Caldwell, of Massachusetts.

A Sunday-School Sermon was delivered in the Redding-street Methodist Episcopal Church, yesterday morning, by the Rev. Dr. Crooks, with exercises in singing by the children and infant class.

The Rev. Dr. S. E. Sampson, lately a Missionary in the Holy Land, delivered an illustrative discourse on that subject, yesterday, in the Chapel in Seventeenth-street, Sixth-avenue.

In the Cherry-street Methodist Episcopal Church, the Rev. J. B. [illegible], officiating, his subject in the morning being "The Joy of the Righteous;" in the afternoon, "The Duties and Responsibilities of Young [illegible]."

The Rev. [illegible] Graves preached at the same hour in the Church of the Puritans, Union-square, a discourse on the "Position and Authority of the Sabbath in the Decalogue."

City Items.

In the case of John Metcalfe, reported in our issue of Saturday charged with attempting to abscond with moneys owing to Mr. John Lassow, a dry goods merchant, in Toronto, Canada, it appears that the complainant became satisfied to allow Metcalfe to escape from beneath his alleged protection under the "Wings of the American Eagle," upon the production of a draft on a banker for $400, being nearly the amount of the claim due.

A New Line of Steamers for Havana.—Capitalists who are largely interested in the Cuban trade both here and in Havana, have organized a Joint Stock Company, with a large capital, for the purpose of placing a new line of iron fast steamers upon the route between New-York and Havana. Capt. J. J. Waters, who is the agent for organizing the enterprise, arrived here in the Cahawba with plans and specifications for the new steamers, which, it is presumed, will be immediately put under contract. Messrs. Mora and Hovardo Navarro & Co. are the agents for the line in this City.

good guess in [illegible] theory of selecting [illegible] is being rapidly [illegible] All that farmers ask now of agriculture is that it shall perform in farm labor what it promises in theory, and it is certain it will. The great questions interesting agriculturists have hitherto been—How much grain can I raise per acre? How fat can I make my beef and pork? But this Fair seems to have demonstrated that the character and form of these queries is changing, and that farmers will in future ask—How many bushels of corn can I raise for a dollar? How many pounds of meat can I raise for a dollar? And, in regard to size of animals, I think may be added the query of Mr. Geo. Geddes—How many legs shall a given weight of beef, mutton and pork walk upon?

If the State Fair shall do nothing else except to excite attention to these queries, it will not have been held in vain. T. W. F.

The Crystal Palace Fire.

The last remnants of the Crystal Palace are now lost with the ground, and the exhibitors at the late Fair will be admitted to the ruins to-day to search for the remains of their property.

The American Institute having decided not to revive the Fair this season, the exhibitors have taken the matter into their own hands, and in pursuance of adjournment, held another meeting on Saturday, at the building tendered them free of expense, by Ex-Alderman Charlock, for the new exhibition, and which has been accepted for that purpose by the exhibitors. The building is situated on the corner of Eighth-avenue and Fifteenth-street, and is occupied on the ground-floor as a car depot for the Eighth-avenue Railroad. The upper floors of the building, which is four stories high and 100 feet square, are in a rough, unfinished state, and will require a large expenditure of money to put them in a fit condition for the exhibition. In other respects, and waiving the distant location, the place is well adapted for a fair.

The meeting, which numbered about one hundred persons, was called to order by the Chairman, Mr. J. H. Paxon, of Ohio. Dr. Kenway, from the Standing Committee, reported that they had held an interview with George Law, who expressed his sympathy with this movement of the exhibitors, and promised to do everything in his power to forward their wishes. He declined, however, acting as President of the new organization, on account of a press of other duties; but as his declination did not take the form of absolute refusal, the Committee had little doubt that if the movement was carried forward with dignity and vigor, Mr. Law would be induced to accept the post. The Doctor further reported that they had communicated with Ex-Alderman Charlock, who had transferred to the exhibitors the generous offer made by him to the American Institute, and that they had expressed the thanks of the exhibitors, and accepted the offer in their behalf.

He then alluded to, and commented at some length upon, the following letter which he had received, and which he waived reading at the time, saying that it would be furnished to the Press, and he hoped would be thoughtfully perused by the public. In the course of his remarks he sketched the history of the American Institute, and said that the large property now in their possession of right belonged to the inventors and exhibitors of the various Fairs that had been held under their management; and intimated that when the new institution now contemplated was duly organized, a claim would be instituted on behalf of the exhibitors to the fund now in possession of the American Institute:

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Oct. 9, 1858.

To Dr. Wm. W. Kinne, Chairman of the Committee of Exhibitors:

SIR: As one deeply interested in the present movement of the inventors and exhibitors, I have concluded to address you my ideas upon your present position, in hopes that it may lead others better capable of dealing with the subject to aid you and assist you in the important course upon which the inventors have entered with whatever they can of intelligence, labor or cash. I am no speaker, or I should have before this offered my reflections for the consideration of those who feel that the course of the Institute demands on your part some decided action for your future protection against the mean, selfish, low cowardice of men who have shown, in the hour of your trial, that their association with arts and mechanism was wholly and solely that of personal aggrandisement. The action of the Board of Managers on Friday is the evidence of the foregoing charge. I wish to deal with facts; to them, therefore, I confine myself.

In the first place, the Institute was originally organized with the view of encouraging the sons of toil onward to the perfection of their several handicrafts, by providing them with a suitable place wherein they could exhibit their labor of the hand and head, and take upon themselves the conducting of the business on the best and most equitable principles to secure the object sought. The Institute as an incorporate body of itself could do nothing; without inventors and exhibitors the Institute could not possibly exist more than in name. The inventors and exhibitors are, in every view of the case that may be taken of their relationship with the Institute, the soul and body of the concern. The inventors and exhibitors of America can, at any moment that they will, create an Institute, but the Institute can never create, of its will, inventors and exhibitors. The latter are therefore the principal, the Institute the servant. It seems that this plain and incontrovertible relationship has been forgotten by the Institute. They may for the present moment forget this, but they once knew it. Do not the inventors remember that they were invited, solicited even, to bring the product of their inventive genius to the Fair? To which had they not responded, no Fair could ever have been held. All, therefore, that the unfortunate inventors and exhibitors have do is never again to renew relationship with the Institute. Discharge that ungrateful servant as you would a proud, stuck-up domestic that had forgot that service was required not dictation, and no service when "inexpedient."

Sir, the inventors and exhibitors of America never had a better opportunity of teaching moneyed institutes that labor and genius united is the true wealth of the world and the soul of all permanent organizations, and therefore not to be despised. To accept of further services from the Institute that has deserted you in your hour of trial, would be an error—a great error on your part. There are in this city an abundance of material to make the equal of the present Institute; and now that you have by a fire calamity been brought to a position where you can take a fair start, with the universal approval of the inventors and the nation at large, do it, and success is yours. In fact, there seems to me no possibility that inventors can have further relationship with the Institute. The grievances of which you complain are so well known and appreciated by those who have been present at your meetings, that I need not refer to them—but the more reflection that is bestowed upon the almost cold indifference of the "inexpedient" resolution of the Managers, it is a moral certainty that whether you form a new Institute or not, one must be formed to meet the future wants of inventors and exhibitors, who will not trust the present Institute again. Once more, go on, and success is yours.

A FRIEND TO FAIR AND HONORABLE DEALING.

Mr. Riker, of this City, also a member of the Standing Committee, reported verbally and at length upon the present position, prospects, and anticipated future results of this new and independent movement of the inventors and exhibitors of the country. He did not wish to speak in severe terms of disparagement of the American Institute. It had no doubt accomplished much good in its day, and might even yet have continued its fellowship with the inventors and exhibitors, if it had shown a little more spirit of liberality in the late emergency. If it had done this, they might now have been far advanced towards another exhibition. But they had seen fit to desert the exhibitors, and he considered this an auspicious time to inaugurate an enterprise that had long been wanting, and that whatever had been the action of the American Institute in the late calamity, would have eventually advanced to supersede that institution. The growth and present position of New-York demanded an institution of a more comprehensive character; one that should offer facilities for the permanent exhibition of the industry and inventive genius of the country. Now was the time to lay the foundations of such an institution. The sympathies of the public were with them, and he had no doubt the City, in due time, would give them grounds in the Central Park wherson would eventually be erected a building far surpassing in grandeur the late Crystal Palace; and although it might not be built of iron and glass, it would not be less ornamental or durable, and he hoped would be so constructed as not to totter at the first dash of fire. The Institution should be owned and controlled by the inventors and artificers of the country, and its depot, permanently stored with the products of the country's genius, would become a permanent resort for the fashionable and pleasure-seeking classes, as well as an instructive school for the sons of industry.

It was attractions similar to these that made Paris the resort of the genius, talent and fashion of its own, as well as other lands, and the citizens of New-York would not be backward in lending their aid to an enterprise that promised such glorious results to themselves and to their common country. They had already enlisted in the enterprise that model of American industry and enterprise, Geo. Law, who had originated and successfully carried out the most gigantic enterprise this country had ever known—who from a humble mechanic had become a millionaire, and whose liberality kept pace with his wealth and enterprise, and with such a leader they were sure to succeed. They might meet with opposition, but he was sure that none engaged in this enterprise would ever be guilty of conduct that would consign them to the prison of Cilichy, as had been the lot of a City editor who had lately seen fit to vilify the humble efforts of the exhibitors at the late Fair.

As a preliminary to this enterprise, they should all go to work and aid in getting up the proposed Fair, and from these beginnings, small though they might be, would grow up an Institution that would be an honor to themselves and a blessing to their countrymen at large. He begged leave to offer the following, and hoped every person favorable to the enterprise would use his best exertions in getting signatures to the paper mentioned therein:

WHEREAS, In our opinion, a necessity exists for a National Institute for the encouragement of American industry, by the permanent exhibition of the products of the artist, inventor, manufacturer and agriculturist; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the following paper be circulated throughout the United States for the signatures of all parties interested in the furtherance of the above object:

We, the undersigned, believing that a necessity exists for a National Institute, the object of which shall be the encouragement of American industry, do pledge ourselves to heartily cooperate with each other in the consummation of said enterprise.

The reports of Messrs. Kinne and Riker were adopted, and the Standing Committee were continued in office, and delegated with power to call a mass meeting of exhibitors and others favorable to the movement, to be held this evening, at such place as the Committee may designate—due notice of the same to be given in the papers. The Committee were also empowered to select the names of permanent officers of the new organization, and submit the same to the meeting to be held this evening. The meeting then adjourned.

The Rev. John Pierpont's Address to the New-York Spiritual Association.

Yesterday morning, DODWORTH'S Dancing-room, adjoining Grace Church, was to filled to overflowing (to the phrase goes) with a congregation of Spiritualists. There was not sitting-room enough for those who came early; there was not standing-room for those who came late.

The occasion, as may be conjectured from these facts, was one of interest. The congregation was to be addressed by the Rev. JOHN PIERPONT, the venerable poet, whose works have been as widely published in England as in this, his native land, and whose reputation as a leading New-England Unitarian Divine is, or was till lately, unchallenged. It seems that Mr. PIERPONT, in these his latter years, has made himself unpopular with the Unitarians, having ventured in the direction of Spiritualism and been drawn into its vortex. However this may be, the disciples of Spiritualism in this City were aroused yesterday, and a very full house—a house that tried to ascend from the street and could not reach even the vestibule of the building, but stagnated outside till its patience was exhausted—was the result.

The proceedings commenced with a hymn by the choir, followed by a prayer from Mr. PIERPONT, and the reading, by that gentleman, of the Fourth Chapter of Job, which, as we understood him to say, was sufficient evidence that Spiritualism was no new thing, but old as the oldest book in the Old Testament. After another hymn by the choir, Mr. PIERPONT commenced his address. Just as politicians defined their position he would commence his address by defining his. He was not positively a Spiritualist. He had not in form joined that Church. He was not a medium of any sort. His audience must not expect spiritual eloquence from him. He never expected to speak in a trance. His hearers must hope for nothing superhuman from him.

His first education was that of the Bar, and as a student of law he became familiar with forms of evidence. He found that evidence was limited—if you could not get evidence that would be mathematically conclusive, you must be satisfied with what you could get. When a young man, he was educated, as to his religion, in the strictest sect of orthodoxy. After he became of age, the doctrine of the Trinity occupied his attention for a long period; he studied the evidences on the subject, as he did law, in his legal studies, and finally came to the conclusion that the doctrine of the Trinity could not be sustained, and on that ground he had stood for the last forty years.

When the phenomena of Spiritualism began to appear it seemed to him that, as a man interested in spiritual matters, he ought to investigate them. For that investigation he had rather unusual opportunities. The result was that, as an outstander, his mind was under a strong impression that the phenomena were of God. They were part of the onward movement, the great march of progress, which was everywhere visible in the Universe. He could nowhere find that God had ceased to work in the physical creation, neither had he in the moral. By favoring Spiritualism he had probably shut himself out of the Unitarian body, but he thought that that body was not brave enough to examine the question with him.

He did not come to argue in defence of Spiritualism as a sect. We all had spiritual natures, and it became us to cultivate that nature. If he (Mr. PIERPONT) had come to false conclusions, it was his misfortune, not his fault. If a man that did not come to false conclusions, he might have confidence towards God.

It was known to all society that a few years ago a remarkable series of phenomena, such as the movements of material bodies without visible agency, and which could be referred to no adequate cause, had taken place. The question must occur "What moves these bodies?" Audible sounds had been heard. What caused those sounds? Whence come these phenomena? That is the question. It was assumed by some that they were produced by the persons who operated as media. Buzz, and those of his school say the noises are produced by the toe-joints. Others have a theory of electricity, galvanism, or magnetism. These explanations did not begin to touch the fact. Will a table move with no one near it, as he (Mr. PIERPONT) had seen it do, without a cause, hidden or not hidden, spiritual or material? He had seen a table move two or three feet one way, and two or three feet another way—there being no person near it, within a yard or two—and finally upset and break into fragments. He had previously examined that table. There was no machinery about it. It was a plain, ordinary table. There was no room beneath the room in which the phenomena took place. Electricity would not explain it, for he placed an electrometer upon it, while it was agitated, and if electricity had anything to do it, the electrometer would have been shattered into fragments. These were phenomena whose existence was as palpable as the sun at noon day, and how were they were to be accounted for?

Oh, but I don't believe they do occur, says the Greek Professor at Cambridge. And he adds that it is a stupendous delusion. A stupendous delusion! Yes, stupendous, indeed—when thousands throughout the land believe it on its own external testimony. The proof of the authenticity of the Bible was not upheld by one hundredth part of the testimony which upheld the truth of Spiritualism. Miracles, what were they? He did not believe in any violation of the laws of Nature. Of miracles, no man knew anything. No man could define a miracle. The word miracle was derived from the Latin mire, a wonder; mirabilum, a small wonder—something that was strange, unaccustomed. But everything, in his belief, went according to law, and the communion of the dead with the living would not transcend any law.

Is it a fact that spiritual beings in the spiritual world do manifest themselves to men? The Spiritualists say they do. The Anti-Spiritualists say they do not. The latter have the right to call on the former for the burden of proof. We, the Spiritualists, refer to the presence and action of the spiritual power in our natures. Our opponents deny this presence and action. Then let them tell us how these phenomena are produced, or they must concede our point.

In this way Mr. PIERPONT, with an earnestness and evident sincerity, that won for him the respect, not only of the professed Spiritualists, but also of the Skeptics, in his audience proceeded for some time. His evening lecture was as well attended as the morning discourse. A collection was taken up, on each occasion, to defray expenses.

Police Intelligence.

RUFFIANISM IN THE FIRST WARD—ROBBERY, KNOCK-DOWNS AND PISTOL-FIRING.—Ruffianism is on the onward march in the First Ward. Between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday morning a gang of ruffians, living in the First Ward, principally emigrant-runners and small boatmen, called at the porter-house of David Harrington, at No. 5 Washington-street. The place was closed, but the lights had not been extinguished, and inside was Mr. Harrington, the proprietor of the saloon, a man over sixty years of age, his son, and two young men. The parties outside, who demanded to be admitted, were told that the place was closed, and were requested to leave. Paying no heed to the request, they forced open the door, and called for drinks. The drinks were given them, but they refused to pay for them, and insisted that Mr. Harrington should trust them again. Knowing their ruffianly character, and fearing violence at their hands in case of refusal, Mr. H. complied with their demand, hoping that they would quietly leave. This did not satisfy them, for as soon as they finished the second round of drinks, the gang immediately surrounded Mr. Harrington, and while two or three held him by the hands, the others proceeded to rifle his pockets. Fortunately two dollars was all they obtained, a package of $100 which Mr. H. had in a secret pocket escaping their notice.

Finishing the robbery, the scoundrels knocked down Mr. Harrington, his son, and the other two young men who were in the place, and, drawing knives and pistols, proceeded to leave, threatening further violence if they made any outcry. Young Harrington disregarded the parting injunction of the rowdy gang and started after them, shouting for the police. One of the ruffians, thinking to silence his impertinent clamor, drew a pistol and fired at him. The ball struck Harrington on the side of the head, and making a furrow of several inches in length across the scalp, lodged harmlessly in a door. The call for police, and the pistol, firing was heard by Officer Ferris, who immediately pursued the ruffians. One only was arrested, a fellow named James Toohy. The escaped parties are well known, and warrants were, yesterday, issued for their arrest, and most of them will, doubtless, be speedily arrested. The prisoner Toohy was locked up in the Tombs.

AN EX-CITY OFFICIAL IN A BAD WAY.—Mr. Nathaniel Selah, formerly Commissioner of Repairs and Supplies, is a man in whom the social element largely predominates. Having plenty of money—he held a City office two years—he is free to spend it, a large bulk going for drinks, and a more than proportionate quantum going down his own throat. He goes well dressed, and is particularly well jewelled—the handsome sum of $300 being the aggregate valuation of his diamond breast-pin, gold watch and two mammoth seal rings. On Saturday morning, 2½ A. M., after having visited several drinking shops in the Bowery, he finally—so it is stated—was compelled to hang for support to a lamp-post. A woman, it is further stated, saw his helpless condition, and feeling helpingly disposed helped herself to his watch and chain. The woman, who gave her name as Eliza Dusenbury, was subsequently arrested, charged with the theft, but the time-keeper was not found. The supposed robber was taken before Justice BEMMAN and locked up for examination. She has been up the river once for a similar offence.

BOGUS BILLSON A NEW BASE.—Peter Hedrick, a canal boatman, whose entire biography might be written in the single line "a life on the raging canal," arrived in the City on Saturday. Calling at the store of Lawrence & Park, No. [illegible] Broadway, he purchased a hickory shirt, handing in payment a counterfeit $5 bill on the Rockland Bank of Rockland, Maine, received $4 50 in good money and left. Suspicious of his success, he returned in a day or two, and, under a pretext of game, tendered a similar bill, received his proper change, and again left. Additionally emboldened, or forgetful of the world-wide apothegm "three times and out," he returned a third time, and offered a third purchase and offered a third counterfeit bill. Suspicion was now aroused and an examination developed the fact that the bills were bogus. He was arrested, protested the utmost innocence and was about substantiating his innocence by showing that there were no more of the bills about him. A more extended search was made and curiously enough a small roll of the bogus issue was found stowed away between his teeth and his starboard cheek.

BAR-KEEPER OF JOHN MORRISSEY.—Charles Dumbleton has fairly won the reputation of being "smart," since his successful doing of a Custom-House officer, named Patrick Campbell, out of his gold watch and chain. Dumbleton went to Campbell—C. claims to be exceedingly au fait in politics, a horse-race and a prize fight—pretending to be a barkeeper of John Morrisey, and told Campbell that Morrisey had got him to get his (Campbell's) watch and chain until a certain bet between Campbell and a man named Morgan was settled. Campbell, who is prompt, and has nothing of the back down in him, delivered his watch into the hands of Dumbleton—the mendacious Dumbleton, as the facts subsequently proved. Dumbleton sold the watch, and had a high old time on the money. On Saturday he was locked up to answer for his mendacity and its results.

A DODGE TO GET FURNITURE.—Mrs. Adelaide Howard, of No. 62 Fourth-avenue, on Saturday appeared before Justice BEMMAN, and made a complaint against Robert A. Murray, of No. 33 West Twenty-sixth-street, charging him with having swindled her out of her furniture. She says that she went some time ago, to board with Mr. Murray, allowing him to use her furniture for her board, and that she signed, as she supposed, an agreement to this effect. Two or three days ago she took board elsewhere, and, the day after her furniture, was prevented from taking it away by Mr. Murray presenting a bill of sale of the furniture, signed by her. She alleges that she was swindled into signing the said bill of sale, supposing it to be the agreement referred to above. The accused was arrested for grand larceny—the furniture is stated as worth $400—taken before Justice BEMMAN, and held to answer the charge.

MORE JUDICIAL INTERFERENCE WITH THE POLICE.—About 9½ o'clock last evening, a man named Stephen F. Rice was arrested by Officer Coan on complaint of C. H. Ball, charging him with an unprovoked assault and battery. Rice, and a friend of his, were drunk and disorderly in one of the Second-avenue railroad cars, and it became necessary to eject them. A tussle ensued with the conductor, during which Mr. Ball and his lady, who were in the car, left, when Rice rushed upon Mr. Ball and grossly assaulted him. Justice BEMMAN soon made his appearance at the Station-house, and notwithstanding the earnest protest of Captain De Camp against his interference, discharged Rice upon bail to appear before the Special Sessions. Rice at the time of his discharge was so much under the influence of liquor as to require two men to bring him out of the cells.

STABBING.—Michael Hoyt, of No. 246 Greenwich-street, and John Butler, of No. 465 Washington-street, had an altercation on Sunday night, while intoxicated. After exchanging several mutual blows, Butler drew a knife and cut off one of Hoyt's ears, besides stabbing him in two or three places in the face. Butler was arrested and locked up, and Hoyt was taken home for medical treatment.

THE CASE OF IRA STOUT.—All efforts to save IRA STOUT from execution, for the murder of CHARLES W. LEWIS at Rochester, seem to be unavailing. The individual Judges of the Supreme Court have in turn been applied to by Stout's counsel, and in turn have refused to grant a writ of error. The last adverse opinion is that of Judge SUTHER, published in the Rochester papers of Saturday. The Democrat says:

This decides the question as to the fate of the condemned, so far as counsel and the Courts are concerned. Mr. POMEROY, who has defended his unfortunate client with consummate ability, and abandoned his cause only when there is no further hope of obtaining a second trial, intimates to us that he now considers his whole duty performed in the premises, and will interpose no further efforts to stay the execution of the dread sentence, which condemns the murderer to a felon's death on the gallows, on the 22d of this month. We are glad to be able to state that the prisoner, whose days are so nearly numbered, is now in a frame of mind which in some degree fits him for the awful event.

An attempt to get up a public demonstration of sympathy with the murderer, made in Rochester on Thursday evening, under the guise of an Anti-Capital Punishment meeting, fell through and failed lamentably. The principal personage in the meeting was that famous strong-minded female, SUSAN B. ANTHONY, who nominated FRED DOUGLASS for the presiding officer, and then the demonstration went out a row.

LONG ISLAND.

A brutal murder was committed in the town of Pawling, Dutchess County, on Sunday night, 3d inst. A gentleman named BANCROFT has a country residence at Pawling, where he resides through the Summer months. He has a younger brother who resides on the premises, and had directed his brother at different times to discharge the Irish servants, one after another. On Saturday night the brothers arrived from New-York, and young BANCROFT demanded the discharge of some of the servants in the house, and his request not being complied with, he refused to accompany his brother home, but continued on to Sharon, Conn., his native place. On Sunday evening he returned to Pawling by the Harlem Railroad. At the depôt he borrowed a revolver, walked to his brother's and knocked at the door, supposing it would be opened by the servant girl, when he would shoot her. But his brother answered the summons, and perceiving his attitude and intention, immediately slammed the door in his face, and fled to the kitchen to alarm the domestics, but found that the coachman was out. When the latter was returning from the barn to the house, young BANCROFT met him and without a word discharged the revolver three times at the unfortunate man, the ball lodging in the abdomen. The inmates of the house were so alarmed by the affray, that only Mrs. BANCROFT would go to the assistance of the wounded man. He was alive when found, but his injuries were of so serious a nature that there is no chance of his recovery. The coachman is represented to have been a man of good character, peaceable and industrious. BANCROFT fled after the perpetration of the deed, and has not been arrested. He is supposed to be on his way to California.

AMERICAN CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.—The American Congressional Convention for the Second District met at the Shakespeare Hotel, Montague-street, Brooklyn, on Friday evening. Alderman VAN BRUNT was elected Chairman, and CHAUNCEY M. PERRY, Secretary. Considerable time was consumed in settling the dispute as to the delegates legally elected in the Seventh and Twelfth Wards. This disposed of the subject of uniting with the Republicans to defeat the divided Democracy in this District was the next in order. A resolution to appoint a Committee of Conference was introduced and discussed until a late hour, when it was adopted by a vote of 22 ayes to 17 nays. The Conference Committee is composed of the following named gentlemen: P. G. Bergen, James L. Smith, James R. Burton, James Flynn, Wm. H. Story, and George L. Bennett. The Committee is understood to be equally divided as to the practibility of fusion.

The Convention adjourned to meet on Thursday next.

SUNDAY AMUSEMENTS INTERFERED WITH.—A man has established at the corner of York-street and Green-lane, Brooklyn, a ball alley to play an Irish game known by that name. It has been kept in operation since it was first established, night and day, Sundays as well as week days. Yesterday, some two hundred Irishmen assembled and played one match, and were about to play another when a posse of the Second Precinct Police, under Sergeant CAORE, made a descent upon the place. They succeeded in arresting the proprietor and twelve of the participants in the game. They were locked up, and will be examined before Justice CORNWELL this morning.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A nigger named JAMES LEE, of New-York, while at work on the top of a brig lying at the foot of Gold-street, about 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon, lost his hold and fell to the deck of the vessel, by which he was killed almost instantly. The deceased was about 40 years old, and leaves a family. Coroner SWELL held an inquest, when a verdict of death from accidental causes was rendered.

YELLOW FEVER.—A man named JOHN MORAN, a boatman, lies sick with the yellow fever at No. 31 Columbia-street, Brooklyn. The case was reported to the Health Officer yesterday by Dr. GEORGE COCKRAN, who has the patient in charge.

DIED DRUNK.—A man named THOMAS SHADY was picked up in the Third Precinct, Brooklyn, late Saturday night, in a beastly state of intoxication. He was taken to the Station-house, and died before morning. Coroner RINGRAM will hold an inquest on the body to-day.

A BOLD THIEF.—A thief wearing a white, thin coat, entered the basement of the Church of the Assumption, corner of York and Jay streets, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon, during service, and took the Priest's coat from a hook and walked off, leaving his own in place of it.

BURGLARY.—The store of JOHN H. WYNANS & Co., corner of Richards and Walcott streets, South Brooklyn, was forced open Saturday night, and robbed of property valued at $75.

BROOKLYN TAXES.—The average taxation throughout Kings County in 1857 was $1 73 per cent., and for this year it is $1 54.8, a reduction of eighteen cents two mills on $100, or a little more than ten per cent. on the amount raised.

BROOKLYN MORTALITY.—During the week ending Saturday last, there were 124 deaths in the city of Brooklyn; of which 17 were men, 19 women, 38 boys, and 50 girls. There was only one death by yellow fever reported. This was JANE FITZGERALD, Kelsey's Alley, Sixth Ward.

In Williamsburg, the Rev. M. R. TOMPKINS preached yesterday his second anniversary sermon before the New-England Congregational Church.

The Rev. C. W. ANDRUS delivered a discourse on Sabbath-Schools in the Washington-avenue Baptist Church yesterday.

The Jury in the case of Margaret Marshall vs. the Newtown Kerosene Company, on trial in the Circuit Court, for the second time, awarded the plaintiff $5,000 damages. The husband of the plaintiff was killed by an explosion in the works of defendants, caused by the carelessness of their agents.

The Police of the Fourth Precinct, Brooklyn, on Thursday night, made a descent upon a house of bad repute, on Hudson-avenue, near DeKalb, and arrested the keeper and five of the boarders. They were all committed for a hearing, to-day.

SUICIDE.—A girl named JULIA BRODERICK, 19 years old, residing at No. 96 Sands-street, Brooklyn, committed suicide Thursday night by throwing herself into a well in the rear of her residence, during a temporary state of insanity. The body was not recovered until Friday evening, when Coroner SWELL held an inquest and rendered a verdict in accordance with the above facts.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A lad named GEORGE MARVIN, 12 years old, on Friday night last fell from the roof of a house to the sidewalk on Franklin-street, Brooklyn, and was instantly killed. Coroner SWELL held an inquest.

New-Jersey Items.

ROBBERY IN A WHOLESALE HOUSE.—About 10½ o'clock on Saturday night, JOSEPH RAMOS, residing at the corner of Washington and Montgomery streets, was arrested at the Jersey City Ferry Dépôt by Officer FARLEY, on a charge of feloniously entering the saddlery store of BEYS, NICHOLS & Co., No. 69 Liberty-street, New-York, and stealing $200 from the safe. Shortly after 9 o'clock Saturday evening the accused, who was formerly a clerk for the above firm, it is alleged, came out of the store, and meeting the private watchman, remarked that he should wait for RAMOS (a clerk) no longer. The watchman suspected nothing wrong, but shortly after found the store-door unlocked and supposed that it was left so by the carelessness of the porter. One of the firm was sent for, when it was discovered that the safe had been unlocked, and $200 in bills were missing. A box, containing $1,000 in gold, remained untouched. Suspicion fell upon RAMOS, and his arrest was effected as he was returning home. It is supposed that he secreted himself in the store before it was closed, and, knowing where the safe key was kept, could easily gain access to the money. The prisoner was taken to New-York and committed.

AN INFANT DISCOVERED IN A FERRY-HOUSE.—On Saturday evening the bridge-tender at the Jersey Ferry-house on the New-York side, saw a covered willow basket remaining on one of the seats after the passengers had all gone out. Curiosity led him to peep in, when he was surprised to find a beautiful female infant about a week old. It was richly dressed, and there was also an abundance of little clothes for the stray waif. It was sent to the Superintendent of Out-door Poor.

DEMOCRATIC ASSEMBLY NOMINATION.—The delegates to the Second Assembly District Convention, composed of the First, Second and Third Wards, met at No. 62 Montgomery-street on Saturday night, and organized by choosing JOHN WILSON Chairman. Alderman WILLIAM VOORHIES was unanimously renominated, and, upon being notified, declined to accept the nomination, and stated his reasons for so doing. The Convention then balloted ten times, with the following result: SAMUEL A. FRENCH, 5; GEORGE McLOUGHLIN, 4; WILLIAM E. BROWN, 2. The Convention then adjourned to the same place, on Tuesday evening.

FAREWELL MEETING IN THE TENT.—The services which have been held for some weeks past under the tent of the Young Men's Christian Association were closed for the season yesterday afternoon. The sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. JONES of the Mariners' Church, New-York, before a large audience.

MONDAY, Oct. 11—A. M.

The Canada's mails from Europe vid Boston were delivered at the New-York Post-Office on Saturday night. The dates are to Saturday, Sept. 25. The telegraph from Halifax has already supplied nearly all the items of financial interest. In American Stocks, Michigan Central Sinking Fund advanced to 87½ sterling, ex-dividend, sales, and 88 subsequently asked; New-York Central, latest sales 76½ sterling, on low figures from this side; Illinois Central 77 sterling. Mr. SATTERTHWAITE reports considerable business in the best of the Railway bonds. He remarks:

"A fair business continues to be done in American securities, the demand being chiefly for the best descriptions of Railroad Bonds. We note considerable transactions in Pennsylvania Central, New-York Central, and Illinois Central Bonds, at fully previous rates. There has been a reaction in Illinois Shares from 29¼, the point recently attained, to 23 dis., at which they close. New-York Central Shares touched 77¼, but have given way to 76."

The latest London Stock Exchange report is as follows of

In reference to the change of interest by the Bank of France, the London Daily News says:

"The Council of the Bank of France have this day reduced their rate of discount from 3½ ⅌ cent., at which it was fixed on the 10th of June last, to 3 ⅌ cent. In the interval the stock of bullion has increased from £20,415,000 to £23,750,000—a difference of £3,335,000. Perhaps the alteration may give the exchange between Paris and London a slight turn in our favor; but it is chiefly interesting as marking a fresh step towards the monetary overflow which in most quarters is considered inevitable, and which may yet induce the Bank of England, despite their judicious reluctance, to lower their terms by another half ⅌ cent. To say truth, however, this latter contingency is one which many persons of sound views would rejoice to see altogether avoided.

The step now adopted by the French Bank, having been fully anticipated, has produced no effect upon the stock markets, either at Paris or London. The English funds to-day were completely stationary in price, and in the other departments of the Stock Exchange business was almost unprecedentedly dull. Many of the dealers have been heard to declare that they pass whole days without entering into a single transaction. Prices, however, remain well supported."

The Morning Chronicle says, on the same subject:

"It seems very doubtful whether the Bank authorities here will make a further relaxation, especially as the increasing requirements of trade, and the distribution of the October dividends, may enable them to find extended employment for their immense resources."

And the London Times:

"The expected reduction in the rate of discount at the Bank of France was announced this afternoon, the movement being from 3½ ⅌ cent., the rate fixed on the 10th of June last, to 3 ⅌ cent. Since the previous alteration there has been an augmentation of about £2,500,000 in the stock of bullion. At the commencement of the year the rate was 3 ⅌ cent., and the bullion, which is now about £24,000,000, was then under £10,000,000. The closing prices of the French Three ⅌ Cents. on the Paris Bourse this evening were 72f. 60c. for money and 72f. 75c. for the end of the month, showing no alteration."

The Foreign Trade at the port of New-York the past week shows a total import entry, including the Dry Goods table in the last paper, of $3,859,616, as against $2,559,009 the corresponding week last season. The Export of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods is $1,897 51—of which over half-a-million is in Domestic Cotton manufactures to China—as against $1,721,893 same week last year. The Export of Specie is $625,817, as against $68,000 same week last season. The Customs paid into the Government Treasury amount to $436,374. The disbursements from the office are $623,941 in excess of this sum; reducing the balance on Saturday afternoon to $10,478,672, against $11,100,813.

The export demand for Specie, and the net disbursements of the week by the Sub-Treasury being thus about equal, the average Bank reserve, on the Statement to be made up this afternoon, is not likely to vary materially from the last average of $28,532,185. The gold exchanges with the interior, however, are believed to be rather against the City for Southern account. The market for Money is easier for 90 days ⅌ 4 months' bills, which are taken, well indorsed, at 4 ⅌ cent., and single name, 4½@5 ⅌ cent. Longer dates range 5@7 ⅌ cent., according to classification of signatures, and 20@60-day approved acceptances go at 3½@4 ⅌ cent. The Stock Brokers are getting money at call, or at 5@10 days' notice, at from 3@4 ⅌ cent.; the supply on dividend-paying collateral being unusually free at 2@3½ ⅌ cent. The improved activity at the Stock Exchange is affording fair employment on other Stock collateral at 3½@4 ⅌ cent. The Foreign Exchanges closed for Saturday's packet, 109¾@109⅞ on London, bank bills, and 109¾@109⅞ merchant bills. The tendency of the market, as the Cotton movement from the South increases, is to lower rates. The next mail for England goes by the Arabia from this port on Wednesday next.

According to the Custom-house returns of the Foreign Trade at this port for the month of September, published a few days since, and our own usual summary, given at the same time, of the trade of the nine months of the calendar year, the Import entries of Foreign Merchandise from the 1st January to 30th September, 1858, were $112,365,379
Add week in October 2,636,810
Total to date $166,025,189

The dealings on the Stock Exchange through the whole of the past week were large and quite spirited. The advance is more general than for usual, and the Bull account, aided by some considerable investment purchases of State Stocks, and other dividend securities—New York Central being the most prominent—is decidedly in the ascendant. Of course the ease of supply and cheapness of money has something to do with this movement. This influence, so ineffectual through most of the summer months, is at length more legitimately required, particularly in the free purchase of the class of securities just named, while it encourages, to a partial extent, the substantial revival of speculation in the non-dividend shares. The market, of all the business days of the week, was strongest on Saturday, closing firm in the afternoon.

There is a good inquiry for the new Federal Loan, finding but few sellers, however, as most of the large parcels have been placed in bank or with other money lenders on a less rate of interest, to await a more decided turn in the market. The transactions in Treasury Bills are much larger. These are sought for the temporary employment of money, and the 4½@4¾ ⅌ cents., which had been selling at, or a fraction under par, now command a small premium, while the 4 ⅌ cents. change hands at about par. There is still $2,500,000 of the 8 ⅌ cents. outstanding. The amount redeemed of late through the Custom-house is very trifling.

The State Stocks have advanced since our last weekly review ¼ ⅌ cent. on Virginias, 1½ on Tennessees, 2 on Californias, and 1¼ on Missouris. The last sold, on Saturday afternoon, at 86¾@⅞ ⅌ cent. Ohios, New-Yorks and Kentuckys are scarce, and the parcels offered bring 1@2 ⅌ cent. above the September currency. Including private sales, the aggregate business in all the State Stocks, for the week, exceeds $1,250,000.

In the Railway Bonds, actively dealt in at the Brokers' Board, very full prices have been realized, partly on English orders for New-York Centrals, Illinois Centrals, Michigan Centrals, &c. Most of these have become scarce on the market, and as much as 92½ ⅌ cent. was paid on Saturday for the six ⅌ cents. of the New-York Central. The Convertible or non-secured issues of the Erie Company have also improved, while some few of the second mortgage, due in March next, have been sold down to 83@81 ⅌ cent. This is on account of the extension of time (5 or 10 years) asked for by the management in order to bring up to par value the $4,000,000 of 1883 bonds reserved to pay off the previous mortgage. The progress to this end has, of late, been exceedingly slow, by reason of the crisis and other difficulties, and it must be confessed that the entertainment provided in the circular of the President on this subject is not exactly the one to which the bondholders, any more than the shareholders, were invited when Mr. MORAN accepted office and $25,000 a year. But the fault it will be seen, in the following extract, is not in the capacity of the road:

"The traffic of the Company for the present fiscal year ending Sept. 30, will not exceed $5,250,000, in consequence of the commercial crisis and the competition between the four great lines, which fortunately is now terminated. Two years ago the gross receipts were $6,350,000. Whenever the traffic of the country resumes its ordinary activity, with fair rates of transportation, the revenue of the Company will undoubtedly reach again the above figures, and when the Long Dock can be brought into use, it must greatly exceed them. Had the Company this year been in receipt of the above amount, all its floating debt would now be liquidated, and the net revenue would hereafter be ample to provide for the interest on the entire debt, as well as the payments to the sinking fund, as will be seen by the following statement:

Gross revenue		$6,350,000
Expenses 60 ⅌ cent. (I am confident they can be reduced much below this as soon as the road is in thorough condition, which it will be before long. The average expenses from 1852 to 1857, inclusive, have been 56¼ ⅌ cent., the receipts varying from $3,536,000 to $6,350,000.)		3,810,000
Total		$2,540,000
Interest 7 ⅌ cent. on $28,000,000 amount of debt after the entire loans of fourth mortgage	$1,960,000
Sinking Fund	480,000	2,440,000
Surplus		$100,000

After the experience of the past twelve months, I am more convinced than ever that no scheme to extricate the Company from its financial embarrassments could be devised which would offer the same advantages to all the interests involved as the one adopted by the Company. To the holders of unsecured bonds it affords the chance of a large profit, if they hold on; to the holders of the new bonds it affords a fair interest, and a good security for the principal; to the holders of the old bonds it affords the means of realizing, at a very moderate sacrifice, the value of their property; to the holders of the stock it affords the means of realizing, in the future, the value of their property, which, in the present condition of the Company, is almost wholly lost to them; to the Company it affords relief from the ruinous sacrifices of money, which, in the present condition of the money market, it is compelled from its contracts to make; and, as soon as the Company is relieved from its embarrassments the market value of the investment will greatly add to their capital. To the Company it insures relief without sacrifice, which is indispensable to its future welfare.

The road bed and equipment have been greatly improved during the past twelve months, and within another year will compare favorably with those of any other road in the United States, and the operating expenses will be greatly reduced. If the balance of the fourth mortgage bonds be at once taken, and the second mortgage bonds extended for five or ten years, I have no doubt whatever as to the future prosperity of this Company, as long as managed with economy and intelligence."

The Share dealings, in the early part of the week, were chiefly marked by a strong demand and steady advance in New-York Central. This movement was joined later in the week by an improved speculation in several of the Western Stocks and in Reading. Of the former, Michigan Southern, preferred shares, advanced most, on account of the steady and very marked improvement in the traffic and economies of the line, as now administered. As the interest upon the Funded Debt has always been promptly provided, and this debt, including the Second Mortgage of $3,000,000 amounts, after deducting the sinking fund accumulations, to only $9,500,000, the next effect of a recovery of profitable business will be felt by the proprietors, stock, amounting to $2,500,000, and selling at 47½ ⅌ cent. The common shares sympathize, to some extent, and sold on Saturday at 24¾. The advance in Galena was first to 95 ⅌ cent., from which the price receded to 94½. The September receipts are $161,000. The stockholders, by a vote of 31,000 to 4,000, decline the proposition to interest or commit the Company in a bridge lease over the Mississippi River. It is a step in the right direction to reform that the stockholders have taken all such questions of new expenditures out of the control of the directors. Michigan Central has recovered to 56½ ⅌ cent. Toledo to 82½@¾ ⅌ cent. Rock Island participates in the general improvement to the extent of about 1 ⅌ cent. On Friday, the Philadelphia market took about 5,000 shares Reading at 49¾@49¾, and on Saturday the sales here were about 7,500 shares, at 49½@50 @51@50½ ⅌ cent. The weekly coal tonnage over the road has improved to 40,251 tons, as against 25,321 tons same week last October. The upward movement in the stock, which appears to be a very determined, if not preconcerted one, comes somewhat unexpectedly upon a large Bear account in New-York, and was the feature of the market on Saturday. The business in Panama shares fell off in interest during the week, though the price left off steady at the close, the offering of stock being inconsiderable. New buyers may have been kept back by the violent fluctuations in Pacific Mail, growing out of certain undefined rumors of opposition vid Nicaragua. These rumors now seem to have had their foundation in the promise of money, by irresponsible parties, for the purchase of two of the Colline steamers. This having failed, the movement (or stock-jobbing dodge) is at an end unless the wind can be raised by advertising one of the steamers to sail on a day certain, and receiving passage money in advance wherewith to clear her from the Canal-street moorings. This will hardly be permitted by the actual owners, whose supposed readiness to sell has already been trifled with by outside parties.
